Five Maniacs Die, 35 Hurt, 4,948 Saved From Flames

Fire Converts Montreal Mental Hospital Into Bedlam.

Nuns Fight to Save Men Lashed to Cots

Four Victims Battle Their Way Back to Perish.

By the United Press.

Montreal, Quebec, Nov. 10.—Fire early today destroyed the east wing of St. Jean de Dieu Mental Hospital, housing violent male inmates, killing five madmen and injuring 35 other persons amid scenes of uncontrollable panic.

Nuns, nurses and guards braved falling timbers and crackling flames to free the shrieking madmen from the cells in which they were locked, strapped to their beds. Four of the dead were raving madmen, who fought free from rescuers and dashed back into the burning building, as do terrified horses. The fifth patient died of shock.

The fire broke out between the top floor and the roof of the two-story St. Augustine wing and spread rapidly through three other blocks. It was discovered by one of the nuns when a section of plaster ceiling of the top floor collapsed, belching smoke and blazing timbers.

Housed 4,952 Inmates.

Alarm bells and sirens sounded throughout the huge hospital, having a population of 4,952 insane inmates and nearly 600 nuns, nurses and guards. Panic followed, terrified inmates shrieking and screaming as attendants rushed to free them from their barred cells.

The institution's fire department laid hose lines and sent out three alarms for aid from nearby fire companies.

In 20 minutes the 175 violent inmates of the ward where the fire started had been removed. Nuns went down the corridors unlocking the cells. Nurses slashed the straps binding the madmen to their beds, as time did not permit unfastening the locks on the harness. Two guards seized each patient and rushed their raving charge outside the building to other guards.

Four Fight, Run Back.

Seven of the madmen, endowed with superhuman strength, broke away from their guards. Four rushed back into the blazing building and were burned beyond recognition. The other three escaped from the hospital grounds and were not located until late today.

It was considered miraculous the death toll was not higher. Courageous work of attendants in rescuing their pitiful charges and the fact firemen were aided by winds which blew the flames away from central buildings were credited with averting a horrible disaster.

The hospital, the largest mental institution in the province, is a separate municipality by itself with Mother Superior Rose de Viterbe

4 Die as Wing Drops Off Plane

Wm. Faulkner's Brother Killed; Was Pilot in Mississippi Crash.

By the Associated Press.

Pontotoc, Miss., Nov. 10.—Dean Faulkner, 31, brother of William Faulkner, widely known author, and three Mississippi farmers crashed to their deaths near here late today when a wing came off Faulkner's plane.

The others killed were Henry Graham, 22, Laymon Graham, 24, and Bud Warren, 21. All were farmers of near here.

A native of Oxford, Miss., Faulkner had lived in Memphis, Tenn., the past two years. He had been stunting and taking up passengers here for the last two days.

The crash occurred 12 miles northwest of here, near the town of Thaxton. Witnesses said the wing apparently came off Faulkner's plane.

Faulkner struggled to maneuver the machine over a patch of woods. He succeeded, they said, in maneuvering the plane from over the city. It crashed in an open field, killing all four men instantly.

The plane was a Waco three-passenger cabin.

Faulkner was a commercial pilot at the Memphis Municipal Airport and was considered an expert flyer.

His brother, William Faulkner, of Oxford, Miss., is author of "Sanctuary," and "As I Lay Dying," novels, and the movie, "Temple Drake," among others.

Ex-Congressman Finds Woman's Body in River

Mrs. May Pesteridge Was Depressed, Missing Since Friday.

The body of Mrs. May Pesteridge, 42, of 1024 Bladensburg road northeast, was pulled from the Potomac River yesterday by former Representative James V. McClintic, of Oklahoma, when he hooked the body while fishing. Mrs. Pesteridge had been reported missing from her home Friday.

McClintic said he had gone to the river early and was walking along the Virginia shore between the Highway and Railroad bridges.

"I had already caught a small bass and was using a spoon hook when I hooked something heavy. When I pulled in and saw the long hair I almost fainted," McClintic declared. "I was terribly unnerved."

The body was pulled into the shore and McClintic said he went to a nearby restaurant and notified the police.

Taken to the Morgue the body was identified later by relatives. Police said the woman had been despondent over financial difficulties and had been on relief for a long time.

Mrs. Pesteridge left a note to her daughter saying she was going away. She had not been heard from since. Detective Sergt. Walter Beck, of the Homicide Squad, said his investigation disclosed the father is to be released from the District Work House at Occoquan, Va. today.

McClintic was formerly a member of the House Ways and Means Committee and is executive secretary for Gov. Ernest W. Marland, of Oklahoma. He is in town on State business and is stopping at the Chastleton Hotel.

New Deal Ideas Receive a Blow In Trade Poll

Answers to U. S. Chamber Show Strong Opposition, Particularly in East.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Organized business is expressing emphatic disapproval of "recent trends in Federal legislation" in a referendum conducted by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

A survey disclosed yesterday that polls taken so far among widely-scattered member organizations showed a strong tide of opposition to policies attributed to the New Deal.

Only two business groups out of 28 whose votes were reported to the Associated Press favored trends for which a special committee of the National Chamber's directorate requested "the most thoughtful attention."

Some Refuse Views.

Several other chambers, however, have refused to take part in the referendum. Some objected that questions submitted were "too broad." Others complained that the subject matter was "partisan."

The chamber at Columbia, S. C., where there is much New Deal activity, resigned from the national organization. Its board of governors charged the U. S. C. of C. with "anti-New Deal proclivities."

Four questions, based on the special committee's report—highly critical of the New Deal—were submitted by the national chamber to more than 1,000 local chambers and trade associations:

1. Should there be extension of Federal jurisdiction into matters of State and local concern?

About Competition.

2. Should the Federal Government at the present time exercise Federal spending power without relation to revenues?

3. Should there be Government competition with private enterprise—for regulatory or other purposes?

4. Should all grants of authority by Congress to the executive department of the Federal Government be within clearly defined limits?

East in Disapproval.

Twenty-six of the local and State groups have answered "no" to the first three questions, and "yes" to the fourth.

The Helena and Kalispell, Mont., chambers were the only ones shown by the survey to have taken an opposite stand.

The referendum will not be completed until midnight, November 23. Many chambers in some of the largest cities have not yet voted, and their action could easily reverse the present tide.

While the national chamber has announced it will not disclose any returns until all are in, a Nation-

Engineer Is Executed In Russia After Wreck

Moscow, Nov. 10 (A.P.).—Ivan Nozdrin, locomotive engineer, was executed, it was officially disclosed today, in punishment for having run his train into another, smashing up 24 cars.

The sentence was pronounced in the Moscow-Kursk railway court after disclosures that Nozdrin had operated an armored train for the White Guards in the Civil War of 1919.

Armistice Day Rites to Be Led By Roosevelt

100,000 Will Take Part in D. C. Services and Hear President Speak.

Before a throng of 100,000 citizens and a microphone that will carry his voice to millions of radio listeners throughout the United States, President Roosevelt today will lead the Nation in perhaps the most impressive Armistice Day demonstration since the order to "cease firing" became effective November 11, 1918.

This demonstration for peace will take place at 11 a. m. in the Arlington National Cemetery Amphitheater and heads a score of services in which the Nation's Capital will pay tribute to its war dead.

American Legionnaires, who are staging ceremonies at which President Roosevelt will speak, had completed elaborate arrangements last night for the unprecedented crowd expected at the memorial service this morning.

Forces of the National Capital Police will be supplemented by Army Corps from Fort Myer in handling the rush of traffic. Arrangements were made to augment the parking facilities around the amphitheater. Fort Myer will furnish ushers to assist the large assembly.

Overflow Crowd Due.

Theodore Cogswell, the legion's chairman of arrangements who will call the service to order, predicted an overflow audience for the services on two facts. This is the first time President Roosevelt has attended the annual Armistice Day rites at Arlington. His presence and his address will draw thousands to the scene of observance. Secondly, all former soldiers in Government service will be dismissed from work in order to take part in the memorial service.

The memory of the Unknown Soldier, whose tomb is before the great open-air assembly place, dedicated to the mothers of all "boys who fell over there," will be the first to be honored this morning by the President.

Entering the vast cemetery, sweeping slopes of which are the resting place of thousands who fought for the flag, President Roosevelt will pause before the Unknown Soldier's Tomb. There, just before 11 o'clock, he will place a wreath in solemn tribute to this soldier, now the symbol of heroic sacrifice.

Promptly at the stroke of the hour—the hour at which World War guns 17 years ago ceased their roar—the President will enter the marble theater to speak to the Nation—he will speak words of hope that sacrifice, such as the Unknown Soldier made, will never again be necessary. The Nation, its ears tuned to rumblings of war emanating from other parts of the world, will

LaGuardia Runs City From Bed in Hospital

New York, Nov. 10 (A.P.).—Mayor LaGuardia continued to run the world's largest city today by remote control—from a hospital bed where he is confined with arthritis. Equipped with a portable typewriter and a couple of lead pencils the mayor will transact only the most urgent city business during his confinement. Only his wife and a secretary are allowed to visit him.

One of his first bedside orders was to call for curtailment of traffic for a two-minute period tomorrow, Armistice Day. He is expected to remain at the hospital for a week.

Chinese Flee, Fear Revenge By Japanese

Exodus Follows Report Tokyo Plans Steps in Marine's Killing.

Many Go to International Settlement in Shanghai as Terror Grows.

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, Nov. 10.—A stream of fear-stricken refugees poured into the International Settlement tonight from adjacent Chapei on the heels of widespread rumors that Japanese military action was impending in detribution for the unsolved slaying of a Japanese marine.

Japanese authorities denied the rumors emphatically, but the flow of frightened human traffic through the gates of the settlement was not checked until a late hour.

The scope of their operations, however, had been reduced.

Recalls 1932 Events.

The situation recalled the scenes of 1932 when Shanghai was attacked and a similar exodus took place on a somewhat larger scale.

Today the Szechuan road, main artery into the foreign-controlled area, was cluttered with jinrikshas, wheelbarrows and other vehicles, all piled high with pathetic household belongings, all moving in the same direction.

Wealthier residents taxed the facilities of taxicab agencies, while poorer families trudged wearily through the settlement gates, carrying their entire wealth on their backs.

Many were forced to submit to police search.

The exodus began early in the afternoon, after a censorship on the Nakayama case was lifted by the Chinese press. Not until late tonight did the stream of refugees dwindle.

At the same time Japanese authorities voiced regret Chapei citizens were giving ear to "baseless rumors" of a Japanese ultimatum.

A spokesman for the Japanese naval attache said:

Says Slayer Foreigner.

"We deplore the mass exodus. Aside from asking the fullest cooperation of Chinese authorities for apprehension of the culprit, we have made no demands whatsoever."

He voiced gratification at the "spontaneous co-operation of Chinese authorities" which was pledged on four occasions yesterday, but added: "We are concerned lest the incident seriously affect Sino-Japanese relations."

The Japanese continued to press for the fullest assistance of settlement police who are responsible for order in the area of the shooting.

Although the sole Chinese eyewitnesses asserted the assassin was wearing foreign clothes, Japanese investigators insisted there were indications he was a Chinese.

They ascribed the slaying to political motives, saying they be-

Ras Nassibu Dies at Fall of Sasa Baneh; Italians Nearing Jijiga.

The Italo-Ethiopian Crisis.

The troops of Gen. Granziani in the south took the town of Sasa Baneh and were reported to have pushed on to the vicinity of Daggah Bur, 70 miles from Jijiga.

In Addis Ababa it was announced that Ethiopia's greatest army, 100,000 strong, was massed in the mouintains beyond Makale. Emperor Haile Selassie reviewed the "gold army" from Wallega Province.

As Italy prepared to honor King Victor Emmanuel on his sixty-sixth birthday today, confidence was expressed in Rome that sanctions invoked by the League of Nations will prove a failure.

By the Associated Press.

Rome (Monday), Nov. 11.—A dispatch from an Italian correspondent at Djibouti early today said travelers arriving from Diredawa reported Ras Nasssibu, Governor of Harar, was assassinated during a revolt among his troops at Sasa Baneh shortly before it fell to the Italians.

By the United Press.

Asmara, Nov. 10.—Accompanied by a large fleet of midget tanks and hundreds of camels bearing artillery and water, the victorious troops of Gen. Rodolfo Graziani tonight were reported to have pushed beyond Saga Baneh to the vicinity of Daggah Bur, 70 miles from Jijiga.

Garrisons were posted at Sassa-Baneh, an important caravan trail center, which fell without resistance after the Ethiopian defeat at Gorahai early last week.

The Ethiopians are believed to have been demoralized by several days bombardment of Daggah Bur with incendiary bombs, which caused huge fires in the bush land north of Gorahai, where it was

Boxer Admits Torch Slaying Of Stepfather

Claims He Was Attacked; Sparred With Louis, Youth Also Says.

By Philip J. Austensen.
A Staff Correspondent.

Rockville, Md., Nov. 10.—Formally charged with a murder to which he has confessed, William Brown, 21-year-old Negro boxer who boasts of once having traded punches with Joe Louis in the latter's Philadelphia training camp, was taken to Frederick late today. He will be arraigned for the killing of Manuel Silva, sailor and fruit peddler, whose charred and beaten body was found on a road near here yesterday morning.

Shortly before Brown, who is known as Little Bobby Burns in the pugilistic fraternity, was taken from police headquarters here in the custody of District Attorney Sherman P. Bowers, of Frederick, and Sheriff Roy M. Hiltmer, he told how a quarrel over a chicken led to the row, which eventuated in Silva's death.

Missed Bill of Sale.

Brown, who was Silva's stepson, told how he and his sister, Blanche Smith, and occasionally his mother, lived in the small frame house near Adamstown in Doubs, Md. They all got along all right until about two months ago, when Silva called in Sheriff Hiltmer and said he had missed some clothing. About ten days ago Silva and Brown had another quarrel.

This time Brown said Silva missed a bill of sale from his writing desk and complained that somebody was trying to kill him by putting glass in his food.

On Thursday Brown said he killed a chicken for his sister, Blanche, and that Silva got angry.

"On that day I was home until about 11 p. m. with Silva, my sister, Blanche Smith, of Washington, who had been staying there with her baby for about three weeks. I had been watching Silva all the time," the confession read, "because he had threatened me several times and he was carrying a dagger.

"Silva was ironing a shirt. I was at the stove. Silva came at me with a flatiron. I dodged this blow and picked up an iron pipe setting in the corner which I had in case he bothered me or my sister some day."

Describes Fight.

He told how Silva attacked him and how he took an ice pick from Silva which the latter had in his hip pocket.

"He had a dagger in his right hand and an ice pick in his left," Brown said.

"I stuck the pick in his chest and the handle came off it," he said.

After he saw Silva was dead he said he put a sack over his head and shoulders and took him to the cellar and tried to burn the body. He tried for half an hour, he said, and again on Friday, and at 6:30 Friday night put him in the car and took him to the roadside.

"I wanted to take him a long way so nobody would know him except by his fingerprints," the boxer said.

Brown's mother, Mary Silva, husband of the murdered man, and his sister, Blanche Smith, are held in Frederick as material witnesses.

In his confession Brown said he had served two terms in the House of Correction for auto stealing and 30 days in the Baltimore Jail for fighting.

He is being held without bail pending action by the grand jury.

Brown said his mother was buying the house where the torch slaying took place but that it was in her husband's name.

Fire Kills Five Women.

London, Nov. 10 (A.P.). — Five women, including the wife of Dr. Philip Franklin, prominent London laryngologist, perished today in a fire in Franklin's West End house.

Corinna Loring Fought by Two Killers, Is New Theory.

Police Are Hunting Man in Washington

Richard Tear, Fiance of Slain Stenographer, Is Still Held.

A mystery woman last night challenged the attention of police investigating the brutal murder of 27-year-old Corinna Loring, of Mount Rainier, Md.

This angle came to the fore after Dr. Oscar LaVine, who performed the autopsy, announced that he had found five teeth marks on the girl's left hand.

"You wouldn't find one case in a million where a man would bite in a fight," Dr. LaVine said.

Dr. LaVine suggested that Corinna, who was to have been married Wednesday, was killed by a man and a woman, the woman holding her and perhaps biting her while the man beat and strangled her.

Man's Arrest Near.

Mount Rainier police last night announced that they would shortly arrest a Washington man in connection with the murder. This man was described as a former suitor of the murdered girl.

Richard Tear, 29, an attendant at St. Elizabeth's Hospital, who was to have married Corinna, still was being held in the Hyattsville jail last night for "investigation." He was arrested late Saturday night at the home of Corinna's parents.

"I don't know any more about it than you do," he told reporters just before he was arrested.

Mrs. G. A. Loring, the girl's mother, was on the verge of a collapse when Tear was arrested at the Loring home Saturday night, and a doctor had to give her sedatives.

Police learned yesterday that Mrs. Loring was opposed to Corinna's imminent marriage to Tear. The marriage originally was scheduled for the spring. When Corinna told her mother it had been moved up four months, Mrs. Loring, according to police, exclaimed:

"You are making a mistake. You will be sorry."

Washington Man Hunted.

Miss Loring disappeared around 8 o'clock a week ago tonight. Tear said he called at the house at 8:40 and found the door locked.

On Wednesday Tear called at local newspaper offices, submitted photographs of Corinna and asked editors to help him find her.

The body of the girl was found Saturday afternoon on lonely Saddleback Ridge in Mount Rainier. She had been beaten, bitten and strangled with a piece of wrapping cord.

Mount Rainier police last night were looking for a Washington man with whom Corinna was friendly before she met Tear. This man, police were told, was the one Mrs. Loring wanted Corinna to marry.

Boat Hits Rock; 19 Are Drowned

One Saved After Crash in Reefs Off Irish Shore.

By the United Press.

Donegal, Ulster, Ireland, Nov. 10. Nineteen men were drowned today when a boat en route to Aran Island from Burtonport struck a rock and capsized.

Only one survived.

It was believed the skipper decided to sail the boat through a narrow channel in order to save a long detour, due to fog.

Eighteen went to the bottom with the shattered craft. Two clung to wreckage until rescue craft arrived, but one died of exposure and submersion.

Six bodies were recovered.

The boaters were Irishmen returning to Aran from Scotland, where they have been working in the harvest, and their relatives and friends who met them at Burtonport.

Aran was only 4 miles away, but the course lay through treacherous reefs made particularly dangerous by the fog.

Among the victims were the boat's owner, Edward Gallagher, his four sons and two daughters.

The tragedy brought overwhelming grief to the little island, which was the scene of the motion picture, "Man of Aran," circulated widely several months ago.

British Send Egypt 500 More Airplanes

Paris, Nov. 10 (U.P.).—French dispatches from Alexandria tonight said that 500 British war planes have arrived in Egypt during the past 10 days. British royal air force personnel throughout Egypt has been increased. A new aviation camp is being built on the outskirts of Port Said.

Mohammedan Priest Executed By Russians in 'Holy War Plot'

By the Associated Press.

Tashkent, U. S. S. R., Nov. 10.—The Mohammedan priest, Pir Ishan Abdul Mutaliev, and three of his aids were ordered shot after their conviction of plotting a "holy war" against the Soviet Union, publication of the court decision disclosed tonight.

The sentence was pronounced November 3, with no right of appeal. Hence it generally was understood the sentences already had been carried out.

In such cases sentences must be fulfilled within 72 hours, unless an appeal is made or clemency is granted.

The presumed executions ended a sensational 16-day trial before a special collegium at Kokand, near here. Thirty alleged plotters were convicted of planning an invasion by the "troops of Islam," which was to coincide allegedly with an uprising in the Soviet Republics of Tadzhikstan and Kirghiz and the territory of Ferghana.

Pir, it was contended, was to have headed a new Mussulman State in the region to be wrested from the Bolsheviks.

Sentenced to death with him were his principal "Haphas" or assistants, Mula Dekhan, Halmirza and Abdul Satter.

Four other convicted plotters were sentenced to ten years in prison, 22 received lesser terms, and two were acquitted.

The prosecutor accused Pir of attempting to refit the yoke of superstition and ignorance on a people, whom, he said, were being enlightened by Soviet rule.

In a bitter attack on religion, he declared that in the pre-Bolshevist era the Kulaks (well-to-do-peasants) and priests played on the superstitions of the people to cheat and exploit them.

The plot, he charged, was backed by former landholding emigres who were organizing the invasion.

State witnesses brought out during the trial that Pir made frequent visits to the border to confer with Van Khadja, in command of the invading troops, and the agent of one Kurshirmat, described as a leader of the emigre group.

At one time Kurshirmat was said to have written a letter to Pir telling him to "build up food reserves, for in the autumn of 1935 I will come with my troops."

The country from which the invaders were to come was not named, but it was stated they were to strike first in Ferghana.

Pir had three wives, one of them only 12 years old. His aid, Mula Dekhan, allegedly had been abroad for him for two years, contacting emigres and organizing bandit raids across the border.

With the Northern Italian Army at Makale, Ethiopia, via Asmara, Nov. 10.—While the northern armies consolidated a new forward line to the south of Makale today, Gen. Rodolfo Graziani's Somaliland troops dashed deep into Ethiopian territory from the south.

An official announcement at noon said the southern forces had followed their strategic victory at Gorahai early last week with a speedy charge up the valley of the torrent Fafan. They have occupied Sasabaneh, half way between Gorahai and Jijiga, Ethiopian southern military base.

The Ethiopians are reported fleeing in disorder toward Jijiga and Harar ahead of Italian armored cars and mobile columns of native troops.

The astonishingly fast progress indicated by capture of Sasabaneh—100 miles beyond Gorahai—was regarded by officers here as all the more remarkable because the Fafan is swollen by recent rains.

Leader Wounded.

The Ethiopians apparently are offering no resistance and probably are demoralized by the critical wounding of their commander, Gerasmatch Afework, in the aerial bombardment of the Gorahai fortifications.

Another advance of 100 miles will have the Graziani columns hammering at the gates of Jijiga, where Dejazmatch Nassibu is reported to have gathered some 150,000 warriors.

At the time this dispatch on the occupation of Sasa Banth was received, the announcement had not reached the Italian government at Rome. A dispatch from the southern front said Gen. Graziani had ordered Gen. Frusci and Col. Malettt to proceed from Gorahai northward along the Fafan Valley toward that town. Meanwhile, official Italian advices said, flying columns reinforced by motorized units, were proceeding along the eastern border of Ethiopia toward the north, skirting British Somaliland.

There was little mittary activity in this sector. The line is being rectified toward the west near the Takkaze River. There will be a considerablt pause here for road building and perfection of communications before the drive toward Ethiopia's fortifications at Amba Alaji, to the south, is launched.

Time Is Needed.

Makale will bt the "jumping off point" for the third Italian wave of advance in the north. It required a month to perfect the Askum-Aduwa-Adigrat line and probably will take a similar period to prepare for the next phase of occupation.

Gtn. Pietro Maravigna's army corps and a column of Eritreans are attempting to clean out small guerilla bands of Ethiopians operating to the west of the present positions. At present they constitute no threat to the right flank of the northtrn advanced armies, but it will be necessary to exterminate this resistance before the push can be extendtd southward toward the beginning of the highway to Addis Ababa at Lake Ashanghi.

A rough airport has been cleared outside Makale and probably will play an important part in the bombardment of the fortified Ethiopian line to the south.

ANOTHER Armistice Day. Eighteen of them are stretched out in a row now, counting the fihst one, which marked a famous victory. It was the end of the war to end war. It also was the end of the war to make the world safe for democracy.

These Armistice Days go back as far as a college senior can remember. The Soviet government has just observed its birthday, too. It is one year older than Armistice Day. Mussolini has completed 13 years of dictatorship and is doing well along in his attempt to extend the blessings of civilization to backward Ethiopia. Hitler's dictatorship is almost three years old and he is hard at work exterminating not only the Jews but God Almighty. Japan is inching forward in her task of making China an up-to-date place. England is ready to join in the armament race since everyone else is well along in preparations for the next world war.

Worse yet, the publicity agent for "National Cheese Week" sends in a statement that four Wisconsin girls, dressed in the costume of 1800, riding a giant sleigh, driving a team of six white horses, will haul a 1,250 pound Wisconsin cheese to the White House Thursday. The cheese is a replica of the giant cheese given to Thomas Jefferson in 1802, a gift of the cheese makers of America who hope the newspapers will give them plenty of free publicity. The ceremony which will "follow in detail as nearly as possible the scene at the White House in 1802, is the climax of activities of National Cheese Week."

Jefferson's cheese was all right except that it had no press agent to tell us "that the six beautiful white horses which will draw the sleigh float to the White House were selected and trained by the (name on request) dairy."

Thus time marches on. Those who say we ought to go back to the horse and buggy days may be right. We seem to be better adapted to them.

Lewis Mumford, in "Technics and Civilization," puts a footnote on the times as follows:

"What matters the fact that the ordinary workman has the equivalent of 240 slaves to help him, if the master himself remains an imbecile, devouring the spurious news, the false suggestions, the intellectual prejudices that play upon him in the press and the school, giving vent in turn to tribal assertions and primitive lusts under the impression that he is the final token of progress and vciilization."

President Roosevelt fell back on his quick wits at his last press conference to duck a question tion about Felix Frankfurter.

A reporter, in a somewhat timid voice, asked the President if he had any comment on Gen. Hugh Johnson's statement that Felix Frankfurter was the most influential man in the country due to his close association with the President. Toward the end of the question, the reporter's voice dropped and was lost in a general cry of "louder" from the rear of the room.

Mr. Roosevelt quickly stepped in and, before the reporter could repeat his question in an audible voice, said that he was asking about one of Gen. Johnson's statements.

That sally provoked general laughter from the reporters. But one of them refused to be thrown off the scent.

"What was your answer to the question, Mr. President?" he asked.

Whereupon the President smiled blandly and replied that the reporters themselves (by their laughter) had just given the answer.

Which exhausted that subject.

James M. Landis, chairman of SEC, was explaining that utility companies would have to register with the commission by December 1. Companies have objected that this imposed a heavy task upon them by the recent death sentence law. Landis explained that filling out registration papers was nothing at all—only a matter of 20 minutes time.

"And," remarked one of his listeners later, "it only takes 3 minutes to be electrocuted."

lieved the killer was a Chinese soldier in plain clothes.

The Japanese bluejackets, comprising a battalion mobilized from three warships in the harbor, marched into the district where their companion was killed yesterday and took up posts along streets and allies, stopping and questioning pedestrians.

Observers pointed out the incidentand its threat of a new disruption in Sino-Japanese relations struck China at a peculiarly critical period, in view of the proximity of the fifth Kuomintang Congress, for which most of the nation's leading militarists now are assembled in Nanking.

Reorts from Nanking said postponement of the congress a few days after its scheduled opening November 12 was believed inevitabble.

One of the chief objects of the congress, according to Chinese reports, was discussion of the Chinese attitude toward increasing Japanese pressure, which even before the succession of incidents culminating in the marine shooting was near the breaking point.

Nanking Fears Moves.

The recent attempted assassination of Premier Wang Ching-Wei, inauguration of China's new monetary progrem and the Nakayama slaying aroused widespread fear that Nanking is likely to feel the hand of the Japanese military more heavily than ever.

Nanking's dilemma was enhanced by Japanese suspicions, voiced openly by an embassy sokesman as to the recent turn for the better in Nanking-Canton relations, urchased by Nanking at the cost of a compromise involving a concession to Canton's reiterated demands for a stiffer policy toward Japan.

The embassy spokesman clearly disclosed the Japanese attitude toward the monetary scheme, which embraces nationalization of silver, with the remark:

"No British or other scheme for financial or economic stabilization in China can succeed unless it is based on Sino-Japanese understandnig and co-operation."

Meanwhile, the tendency toward economc and political separation of the northern provinces appeared accelerated.

Woman Sought In Slaying of Corinna Loring

lice is a motive for the killing. It was not robbery, for her watch was found near her body. It was not assault because the autopsy showed that no attempt had been made to assault her.

The police are fairly certain that somebody who knew the girl called at the home and persuaded her to take an automobile ride.

Former Suitors Checked.

Their original theory—and they have not entirely abandoned it even though Tear is under arrest—was that a spurned suitor committed the murder. Acting on that theory, the police have been making an exhaustive check on men with whom Corinna was friendly in the past.

As for tangible evidence, the police have these articles in their possession:

A man's leather glove was found near the body. Police searched Tear's apartment early yesterday looking for the mate to it. They did not find it.

A few wisps of wavy brown hair whichc were caught in a button on Corinna's overcoat. The hair, apparently, from the head of a man, is now being examined in the Department of Justice laboratory.

A piece of bloody note paper was found at the murder scene. From its appearance, somebody had wiped bloody hands on it.

Watch Stopped at 9:05.

Miss Loring's shattered watch, also found at the murder scene. The hands had halted at 9:05.

Convinced that Mount Rainier is confronted with a major murder mystery, Norman A. Pruitt, mayor of the town, yesterday announced that he would ask the Baltimore police department to assign detectives to aid the local and State police.

Eugene Plummer, chief of police in Mount Rainier, said that he did not have enough against Tear to justify placing a charge against him.

"However," Plummer added, "I am not yet satisfied with his story."

Mrs. Loring told reporters at the time of Corinna's disappearance that she left Corinna alone in the house at about 8 o'clock Monday night. At that time, she said, Corinna was awaiting the arrival of Tear.

Tear's Movements Checked.

An unofficial check of Tear's movements showed that he left McKinley High School, where he has been taking a night course, at 8:20 p. m. The Loring home is about 20 minutes away by automobile. Thus, he would have arrived there about 8:40, as he has said.

Tear said that when he found the house locked, he waited around until 9:15 and then wrote a note to Corinna and left.

He was scheduled to start work at St. Elizabeths Hospital at 10 p. m. According to hospital officials, he arrived there between 9:40 and 9:50 p. m.

It would take at least a half hour to drive from the Loring home to the hospital.

As Corinna's watch had stopped at 9:05 the police are convinced that it was about this time that she was killed.

The body was found five blocks from the Loring home, on the porch of which Tear says he wrote a note at 9:15.

Sailor's Knot Was Used.

Police were intrigued when they learned that Tear was a former Marine. The knot which the killer used to strangle the girl was a square knot, one familiar to sailors.

The Loring family has lived in Mount Rainier for about 13 years. While it was stated at the outset that Corinna's first romance came when she met Tear, neighbors now say that she had "gone steady" with at least three men at various times.

It was Mrs. Loring's opposition to Corinna's marriage to Tear, police were told, that led the couple to advance the date by four months. They wanted to "get the fuss over with." When they told Tear's mother, she appeared pleased.

Mrs. Loring, however, was adamant, according to police, and made the statement that Corinna would be "sorry."

Hundreds of persons visited Saddleback Ridge yesterday. They viewed the bloody spot where Corinna apparently was beaten and strangled and then the spot, about 55 feet away, where the body was found Saturday by E. D. Fletcher while he was out exercising his rabbit dogs.

Dr. LaVine meantime elaborated on the statement he made after performing an autopsy on the girl's body. He felt fairly certain, he said, that Corinna went to Saddleback Ridge with a person or persons she knew well.

Meeting Was Planned.

A paper napkin was found near the body, and this led Dr. LaVine to believe that Corinna had eaten a barbecue sandwich before she was slain. The contents of her stomach are to be sent to Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore for analysis.

Corinna, Dr. LaVine pointed out, had changed her clothes just before leaving the house, indicating that she planned to meet some one.

"There was no evidence that there was even an attempt at a criminal attack," Dr. LaVine said. "I believe she may have gone to talk with someone who tried to persuade her not to go through with marriage—someone who had been thwarted in courtship and felt that if he couldn't have her no one else could either."

Struggle Was Brief.

Dr. LaVine said that his principal reason for believing that more than one person was involved in the murder was the fact that Miss Loring was an unusually strong girl, one capable of puttingupa fight.

But apparently the struggle did not last long, Dr. LaVine said, and he reiterated his belief that one person held Corinna while the other dealt the blows that knocked her semi-conscious and then strangled her.

There were two holes in Corinna's head, but Dr. LaVine was only able to speculate as to what caused them. It would have been possible, he said, for a pair of ice tongs to have produced such holes.

acting in a role equivalent to that of mayor. Operated by the Sisters of Providence, it was constructed 35 years ago.

For the firstfew hours firemen fought against the flames on the one hand and against stampeding madmen on the other. Several firemen received black eyes and lacerated faces from fights with terrified inmates.

35 Treated for Injuries.

Thirty-five patients, nuns, nurses and firemen were given hospital treatment for minor burns and cuts.

Authorities withheld the names of the victims.

The flames blazed until well after daylight before they were brought under control.

Only one dead patient was identified, Joseph Joile, 45, who died of shock. The charred bodies of those who rushed back into the inferno and died in agony muts await possible identification by relatives after a complete check of the wing is made.

The noise was terrific as the inmates were carried to safety, with quickly spreading flames threatening to cut off escape. Iron bars covering all windows prevented escape except through the corridors and main doors to the wing.

When the alarm was sounded, the mother superior quickly organized rescue parties of 4 nuns, 4 nurses and 20 guards to each block, who removed patients from burning or threatened buildings to other wards, and again strapped them to iron cots.

Fugitives Go Home.

The three maniacs who escaped fro mthe grounds made their way to their former homes in widely separated sections of the city. Relatives informed the hospital late today the fugitive patients were being held at their homes.

Arrangements were made at the city jail to accommodate 50 of the madmen whose quarters were destroyed. Others will be housed in other institutions in the city temporarily.

Damage at the hospital was estimated at $150,000. Investigation of the cause of th efire was unlikely until Tuesday, authorities said.

Revised Farm Act Illegal, Court Rules

Virginia Judge Assails the Frazier-Lemke Law.

Harrisonburg, Va., Nov. 10 (AP).—The amended Frazier-Lemke act providing a moratorium on farm debts for three years was held unconstitutional in Virginia by Judge John Paul in United States District Court here before his departure last night to hold court at Abingdon.

Judge Paul, in a lengthy opinion, held that the act takes away substantial property rights guaranteed creditors with secured debts under Virginia statutes and the amendments do not overcome all of the objections raised by the Supreme Court in holding the original Frazier-Lemke act unconstitutional.

South—Similar action has been taken by the Tennessee Manufacturers' Association and the Atlanta, Savannah, Fort Worth, Galveston and Nashville chambers. Houston's chamber is not participating in the poll.

Far West—San Francisco chamber directors said an answer to question 1 was "impossible because of its broad scope," but voted against the "trends" on the other time. The Wallace, (Idaho) Board of Trade voted "no" on questions 1 and 3, declining to vote on the other two. All four "trends" were disapproved by Oakland, Calif.; Ogden, Utah; Reno, Nev., and Tacoma, Wash. Salt Lake City's chamber declined to vote on the ground that the subject matter was "partisan," while Seattle's chamber will decide November 19 whether it wants to vote.

A SUGGESTION

A GOOD many men who have had more than average success have found that it pays them in dollars and cents to use the services of an experienced, reliable trust institution.

By placing the conservation of the funds which they have already accumulated in hands which specialize in conservation, these men leave themselves free to accumulate more, without a divided mind. At the same time, they may free themselves of all uneasiness regarding the eventual management of their estates.

Before you can profit by trust services, you have to know about them. Perhaps you do. If not, we should like to explain them to you.

The Federal Diary

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.

By Morgan Baker.

IN an Armistice Day address, directed at Government employes, James E. Van Zandt, commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, declared that another world war would be much more frightful than the last, and that his organization hopes that such a conflict may never be repeated.

BAKER.

"As Armistice Day nears, the thoughts of every man and woman in America turns back to the days of '17 and '18 when we were engaged in a great war," Commander Van Zandt said. "As commander in chief of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, it is our sincere hope that such a conflict will never be repeated, and that the peace and security of the American people will remain secure throughout the years to come.

"Armistice day is a peace day to be celebrated. If humanity would act in accord with the hopes and prayers of the survivors of the World War, if it would listen to the agonized cries of the living victims, if it would hear the voices of the spirits of the slain, there would be no more war.

"But, instead of a world of peace on this anniversary, we live in a world of greed, suspicion and hate, with the very atmosphere charged with rumors of more outbreaks. A great part of the world is seething with revolution or on the verge of it. Military engines of destruction are larger and infinitely more deadly than even before in war time. Competent observers can see no escape from another catastrophe unless the mind of humanity changes completely. Experience teaches us that a war can longer be confined to the areas covered by the nations which start it, but that it soon spreads all over the earth.

"Humanity is said to be crying for peace, but humanity is either crying out of one eye or it is in the hands of the jingoes. The World War failed to settle all of the disputes from which it sprang, and new disputes have arisen. The nations appear to have halted only to catch their breath, so to speak, and are now bending every energy toward renewing hostilities. Another World War would be far more frightful than the last one, but humanity appears to be blind," Commander Van Zandt concluded.

Highway Engineer Appointed.

Conde B. McCullough, formerly with the Oregon State Highway Department, has been appointed senior highway bridge engineer by the Bureau of Public Roads for service on the Pan-American highway.

Under the approved program for surveys and bridge construction on this highway the services of a well qualified bridge engineer was needed to assume charge of design and construction of bridges over streams along the route of this inter-American road. When completed the highway will form a link in the transportation system between North and South America.

Armistice Day.

Today on Arlington's green slope
Before that spotless envelope
A laurel tribute we will lay
Commemorating that great day
When Peace returned to this fair shore,

With trumpet call and sharp salute,
To our brave dead we'll pay tribute
And pledge anew to long maintain
The peace procured through death and pain
Upon those war-scarred fields of yore.

It seems but just we should recall
Today that those who gave their all
Upon far fields were once as we—
Each one a Federal employe—
Hence, we revere this day the more.

Opening Suit Bids.

After a beginner has thoroughly familiarized himself with "biddable suit" requirements, he is ready to take up the next vitally important step in bidding technique.

The possession of a biddable suit does not, in itself, justify an opening bid. In addition, the hand must contain a certain minimum number of honor tricks, which may be in the bid suit or in side suits. An opening suit one bid requires:

Three honor tricks with any minimum biddable suit.

Two and one-half honor tricks with any rebiddable suit.

These requirements apply to all four positions—first, second, third, or fourth hand; vulnerable or not vulnerable.

When a hand contains more than ing (as, spades or higher ranking one biddable suit, the higher ranking than hearts) should be bid first. Where two biddable suits are of different lengths, the longer should be bid first. For example, holding:

Spades A J 6 2, hearts A K 10 3, diamonds 7 3 2, clubs 8 5, the proper opening bid is one spade, not one heart. Holding:

Spades A Q 10 8 6, hearts 2, diamonds K 9 7 4 3 2, clubs 8, the proper opening bid is one diamond, because of its greater length.

There are a few exceptions to this rule which may be somewhat confusing unless the reasons for their existence are clearly grasped.

With a hand such as:

Spades A Q 10 8, hearts 6 2, diamonds 8 5 3, clubs A Q 10 6, an opening bid of one club will make the future course of bidding easier for both partners. A club bid makes it possible for partner to bid one diamond or one heart, and then the spade suit also can be shown at the one level.

With such a disparity of high card strength as in the following holding: Spades A K Q 10 6, hearts K 6, diamonds 8 7 5 4 3 2, clubs none, a spade bid, rather than a diamond, should be made.

A Bad Start.

Today's hand is a bidding exposition, rather than a problem of play. South, by his failure to start the bidding properly, found himself in a mad three spade contract, whereas the correct opening bid would have kept him at the one level.

Both sides vulnerable.

South, dealer.

	NORTH
	♠ 8 5 2 ♥ A Q 9 6 3 ♦ 7 5 4 ♣ 5 4
WEST		EAST
♠ Q J 9 3 ♥ J 7 ♦ A Q 9 ♣ K 9 3 2		♠ 7 6 ♥ K 10 5 4 ♦ K J 10 6 ♣ 10 8 7
	SOUTH ♠ A K 10 4 ♥ 8 2 ♦ 8 3 2 ♣ A Q J 6

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♥	Pass
3 ♣	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass	Double (final bid)

Opening lead, heart jack by West.

South had his first bid to thank for the mess in which he found himself. A moment's thought would have shown him how to keep the bidding within bounds, namely, to start with a club bid and, over any response from his partner except one no trump, to show the spade suit at the one level. Thus, the bidding should have been:

SOUTH	NORTH
1 ♣	1 ♥
1 ♠	Pass

In the play of the hand, there was no way to avoid the loss of seven tricks—three diamonds, two spades, one heart, and one club. A penalty of 1,100 points instead of 100 (since one spade would not have been doubled).

Today's Question.

Question: My partner had bid diamonds, and I was on lead against four spades. Holding diamonds Q 6 3 2, which should I lead?

Answer: The fourth best—the deuce. It often is vital that your partner know how many cards of his suit are held by you and the declarer.

After Seventeen Years.

We lay wreathes today at the altars of idealism, notwithstanding the cynic's talk and the progress of aggressive warfare on two widely separated fronts. Yet, after 17 years, the lamps burn low.

Assuredly, Belgium has been evacuated and restored. The invader no longer camps in France and the worst part of the desolation has been cleared away. Austria and Hungary are theoretically independent countries and Poland has been restored, with an outlet to the sea. In the main citizens of the Balkans pledge allegiance to sovereigns of their own choosing. Aliens once under Turkish rule have been freed and the Dardanelles internationalized. Russia is independent and develops under institutions of her own choosing. The freedom of the seas has not recently been challenged. And the League of Nations sits in Geneva, albeit without representation from the United States. Ten of Woodrow Wilson's "Fourteen Points" have been realized—after a fashion.

Four yet remain unachieved, however, and these are the most important. For example, shipbuilding on the North Sea indicates that not all covenants are openly negotiated. Stringent control over trade in virtually all countries marks the failure of the world to lower economic barriers. As for reduction of armaments "to the lowest point consistent with national safety," even in this isolated country Army and Navy budgets this year reached a new high. Finally, Makale and Gorrahei mock the thought of impartial adjustments of colonial claims.

The most that can be said is that the world has not forgotten the hopes that were aroused 17 years ago, and that it is still struggling forward.

Campaign Contributions.

Data assembled by an investigator for the Federal Trade Commission show that officials and directors of public utilities contributed $468,900 to Republican campaign funds, and $120,000 to the Democratic chest during the Presidential election years of 1924, 1928 and 1932. There is nothing illegal about these lavish donations; a man of means is entitled to give as much as he chooses to the party with which he is affiliated. Or he may divide his favors with stern impartiality without running afoul of the law.

However, it would be naive to assume that such gifts, especially when they come from active business executives, are always made with no thought of favors to come. It is quite unlikely, for instance, that the utility magnates who have contributed so generously to party funds would be equally liberal after being retired to private life. Indirectly, if not directly, the influence of "big business" inevitably makes itself felt as a political influence. Nevertheless, publicity provides a salutary, if imperfect, check upon corrupt practices. And it also protects business executives from excessive party exactions sometimes almost equivalent to blackmail.

Under our system of Government, dependent for its effective functioning upon complex and costly party machinery, no ideal method of financing party contests has yet been discovered. From time to time there is serious discussion of appropriating public funds for the purpose, but the proposal seems impracticable. Probably it would lead to worse abuses than those now existing. If we continue to rely upon private contributions, publicity regarding the amounts and sources of funds doubtless affords the best possible protection against abuses that can be devised, in spite of its obvious limitations. There are, of course, innumerable ways, often entirely legitimate, for avoiding a full accounting.

When a partisan Administration is supplied with vast sums to be spent at its discretion, another possible source of election cash, supplied by the people of all parties, is opened up. To prevent misuse of such funds, is a problem infinitely more difficult than that presented by direct contributions clearly intended to finance an electoral contest. The best that can be done to protect this kind of fund against partisan raids is to insist that the fullest possible publicity be given to the amounts, geographical location, and character of public disbursements.

As in the case of the "revelations" about the public utility heads, knowledge of facts is not a guarantee against abuses. Publicity regarding contributions does, however, help to protect corporations, individuals, and civil servants against the grosser forms of political exactions. It also arouses public sentiment against those politicians and party executives who rely heavily upon powerful entrenched interests to supply the sinews of war. The utilities, together with many other groups, are only partly to blame for a bad system that has kept them "in politics" because they could not stay aloof without grave jeopardy to their legitimate interests.

China's "Provocation."

The slaying of a Japanese marine in Shanghai appears to be a signal for inauguration of Japan's second major conquest in China. For several months events in unhappy China have been moving toward a crisis. Japanese military officials have gradually tightened their grip upon the northern provinces, waiting apparently for some incident that would provide a cloak, however flimsy, for their new predatory drive.

There is nothing about the slaying to provoke an international flare-up. The marine was shot in a district where the International Settlement police have jurisdiction and from which Chinese troops are excluded under the demilitarization agreement of 1932. Officials at the Japanese Embassy hastily announced their suspicions that the killer was a member of the Chinese army in plain clothes. But a witness of the assault said the slayer was dressed in a coat and trousers of a color similar to those of Japanese marines. Details of the crime can scarcely be expected, however, to interest officials who are determined to find an excuse for taking control over another large portion of China.

The real intent of the Japanese is plainly exposed by a naive statement from the naval landing party headquarters. "While we have no clew regarding the assailant," the statement read, "we consider this attack a provocation directed at the special naval landing party." In other words, the invaders of China decree that a crime of unknown origin is an act of provocation on the part of the invaded. When this brazen effrontery is coupled with Japan's very serious provocative acts against China there can be little question as to Tokyo's imperialistic designs.

In Peiping the invaders who complain of "provocation" have arrested 10 Chinese educational and political leaders as their final act of extending Japanese control over the ancient Chinese capital. The same invaders have begun intensive military maneuvers in North China, and their leader, Gen. Diohara, is said to have demanded immediate establishment of a new puppet state in this region. From the War Department in Tokyo, moreover, comes a statement to the effect that Japan "can not overlook the social and political confusion" resulting from the enforcement of the Nanking government's new monetary policy in North China. In this warning the government which complains of "provocation" virtually threatens to grab a large section of China to "save" it from an essential monetary adjustment by the Chinese government.

Japanese officers should be the last individuals in the world to complain of provocation. For the deep irony of their complaint tends to focus attention upon the very flimsy nature of Japan's excuse for invading her neighbor's territory. Indeed, when Japan's armed forces feel compelled to make an international incident out of a murder over which victimized China could have had no control, they step out of their disguise as an aggrieved big brother and into the role of an artless aggressor.

The Essential Overflow.

This morning Washington makes full confession of its shortcomings as a community and sets about in business-like manner to make amends. The eighth annual Community Chest campaign opens today.

There are homeless and neglected children to be cared for; there are men and women lying sick without proper nursing or hospitalization; there are families dangerously near the rocks of despair; there are old persons without the necessities of life; there are destitute mothers and their babies to be sheltered; there are the blind, the halt and the lame. In some respects the distress of these people has resulted from deficiencies of the community itself. At any rate, Washington must help them.

It is to this end that the Community Chest, no more than a collection agency for the various welfare institutions of the city, has been devised. Not a relief or social welfare agency of itself, its purpose is to raise with the maximum efficiency (only 7 per cent of its funds go for collection and administration) funds for the operation of 65 carefully selected local organizations.

A question has been raised as to what need there can be for this work—or, at least, a large part of it—when the Federal and local governments have so recently set up their elaborate social security programs. One answer is that most of this legislation does not go into effect before 1937 at the earliest. Further, the agencies assisted by the Community Chest are principally concerned with welfare work of a sort not contemplated by Federal legislation. Especially is this true in the case of character-building agencies such as settlement houses and boys' clubs, juvenile protective societies' for orphans and foster children, medical examination centers and mental hygiene clinics.

This year a still more important answer lies in the Chest's efforts to raise a special fund for unemployment relief. After assuming most of the responsibility for feeding and sheltering the jobless during the last two years, the FERA has shifted a larger part of that obligation back to the District at a time when only a meager relief fund is available. Thousands of employable but unemployed men will, therefore, be thrown upon the mercy of Washington's private institutions.

The Community Chest, then, in addition to raising $1,877,990 for the specialized work of its member organizations, is rendering an essential community service by asking for an additional 50 per cent of that sum to support the unexpected load of families cut off from Federal aid.

The day may come when private charity will not be solicited for unemployment relief. Until that day arrives Washington and all other communities must heed the slogan of the Community Chest and consider personally the plight of its citizens in want. Now, as never before, Washington must "Be a Good Neighbor."

"The Washington Plan."

The District Public Utilities Commission is considering a reduction in the rate of return allowed the Potomac Electric Power Co. under the so-called "Washington Plan" for regulating rates on a sliding scale arrangement. The Pepco is the only utility now operating under this system, but the Washington and Georgetown gas companies are considering its adoption. The advantages of the plan were recently explained most lucidly by the commission's chairman, R. E. Elgen, who appeared on invitation to address the Massachusetts Legislature on the subject.

Mr. Elgen emphasized the desirability of testing rates annually by some workable formula, as an alternative to prolonged legal sparring. Contests will arise under any system of regulation, but the commissioner thinks that disputes can be settled with greater ease and promptness under the Washington plan, while controversies, when they arise, are more limited in scope. Of course, the great initial difficulty lies in the determination of a rate base. Once the value of the company's property is fixed, however, adjustments can be made yearly to allow for depreciation, additions, etc.

Agreements must also be reached concerning the fairness and reasonableness of the rate of return that provides the basis for raising and lowering charges. Mr. Elgen believes that the local practice of giving the utility part of the "excess" profits encourages efficiency in management, while the fact that the public shares those profits in the form of lower charges gives it an especial interest in the company's operations.

Obviously no system, however successful in an individual case, will work unless regulated companies are willing to accept a reasonable profit and deal fairly with the public. On the other hand, the regulatory commission must give the utilities a square deal and must be in a position to obtain all pertinent facts concerning their operation. Granting these conditions, it may be argued that almost any kind of regulatory system can be relied upon to produce fairly satisfactory results. However, the fact that the Pepco, operating under the "Washington" sliding scale plan since 1924, has more than doubled its investment and sharply reduced its rates to the public, is an excellent testimonial in favor of this method of regulation. It is also a tribute to the way in which the company and the commission have managed to settle their differences during the years in which the plan has been in force.

Pioneer's Destiny.

Hope for the safety of Sir Charles Kingsford-Smith has not yet been given up, but the odds against his return grow longer with every hour. Apparently his plane failed while he was bucking an autumnal monsoon over the Indian Ocean. If the rescue expedition proves futile, aviation will suffer a great loss. But Kingsford-Smith probably would not have chosen otherwise, if he could have selected his own end.

The doughty Anzac, best known for his England-to-Australia records, was one of the most daring conquerors of the air. The really surprising aspect of his career is the fact that he lasted as long as he did. Enlisting in the Royal Air Force while still in his 'teens, he first flew in Gallipoli and later in France. After the war, he met up with Charles Ulm, another British war flier, and together they conceived the plan for a three-hop flight across the Pacific from Oakland, Calif. Ultimately, in 1928, they realized their dream, flying the scarred and second-hand Southern Cross.

This flight was a prelude to Kingsford-Smith's swift assault on new aerial frontiers. He became the first man to fly the Tasman Sea, the first to encircle the continent of Australia. He set and reset world records from London to Australia and circumnavigated the globe in a stupendous feat. Probably his most spectacular exploit, certainly from point of view of the American public, was his flight westward from Port Marnock, Ireland, in which bad weather finally downed him in Newfoundland.

Now he is apparently gone. But he goes to join a noble company: De Soto, Cartier, Cook, Shackleton, Amundsen, Scott and the others. They are all pioneers who met their almost inevitable deaths in the far horizons of their own courageous seeking.

Taxes Paid And Unpaid.

From the Kansas City Star.

The fact that tax delinquencies in 24 States should have mounted to $1,000,000,000, as reported in a survey made from Chicago, is pretty convincing evidence that the tax load is too heavy to be borne, especially in years of stress. In this instance it is property taxes to consider now two necessities. First, reduce; second, make it as easy and convenient as postinue large the burden upon those who do pay is correspondingly heavier. So the taxing authorities, in their own interest, might begin that are meant.

Some day the tax load will have to be lightened, else it will fall of its own weight. It cannot go on increasing forever or even remain what it now is; for as delinquencies enable to pay what may be levied.

Letters To The Editor.

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications must be signed with the writer's name and address. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters are subject to condensation, and in no case should they exceed 250 words.

Tip To The New Deal.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A tip for the New Dealers: Run over to Baltimore and hire Judge Coleman to teach immature lawyers how to draw a bill. In a series of short, sharp sentences the court answers raw youth in its charge of collusion.

"There has been no collusion," says the court, "here is a real, not a fabricated, conflict." The delicacy of the reply may be admired the more, as it appears that the Government appeared as a "friend of the court."

To prove collusion, John W. Davis was sworn to testify, to the disgust of the court. If any reason for collusion was suspected, a hint would have been sufficient to any experienced attorney, especially a "friend of the court."

The act is "grossly arbitrary, unreasonable and capricious" as a violation of the due process section of the fifth amendment. Obvious to all except the brain trusters. The court was unable to find a sieve with a mesh fine enough to sift out the valid parts of the act. Young attorneys picked out from the air are entrusted with highly important legislation, which they do not understand at its origin, and, of course, cannot defend when it becomes litigation. Is the Administration to become an "experimental station for training lawyers?" HILARY HOBBS.

A Student Poll?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Has it occurred to anyone taking part in the communism controversy to poll a representative group of students and ascertain whether they believed, as a result of alleged communistic teachings, that such a system is desirable?

THOMAS E. MEANS.

Time For The Worm.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Are we to remain a great, free, honest people, worthy of the title of Americans, or are we going to degenerate into a nation of lazy, dishonest serfs, looking to an autocratic central government for our support and accepting the dictation of our affairs by a bureaucracy composed of crooked politicians?

The virtue of thrift is no longer respected. Hardly a dissenting voice is raised when it is proposed to pour out billions of dollars, yet unearned, for unnecessary improvements or to give men subsistence or "made work."

If the substantial people of the country, who will some day have to pay for this wild extravagance, dare to raise their voice in protest, they are at once denounced by the Raw Deal spokesmen as liars, Tories, chiselers, etc.

Anyone who points out the road of common decency and morality, thereby threatening the politicians' clutch by closing up the public money bags, is abused like a pickpocket.

The millions of thrifty middle-class people, who have worked and saved for an independent old age, are the folks who have made it possible for the present free-handed Administration to create a deficit of about $4,000,000,000 in 11 months o fthe current fiscal year.

It is high time for the too-tolerant worm to turn. E. B. M.

Armistice Day.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We celebrate today the part that American soldiers played in the greatest victory the world has ever seen; the spirit of America devoted to a great cause, determined on a great effort, going ahead at a great task and getting it done. We pay honor to those who have gone before, honor to those soldiers who wore the wartime khaki and tin hats of the battlefield, and to commemorate and honor them for their hard-won victories.

They have set the cadence. We can honor them best if we fall in step and march in time with them, with a firm resolve that we shall serve our Nation as nobly as they once did. What we do for ourselves dies with us. What we do for our country by faithful, honest service lives forever. The good soldier who follows in the footsteps of the victors of 1918 is placing new stones in the structure of national defense and a national strength that will stand forever.

Communist Hysteria.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The clearest and most apt analysis of the present communist hysteria appeared in today's letters over the name of Theresa Russell. Most striking is her question, "Meanwhile, just what is so terrible about the principles of communism?"

While I should be the last one to condone the advocacy of communism, even the most rabid Communist baiter must admit that the platforms of the most advanced and stable governments include quite a few of the principles of communism.

It is hard for a dispassionate observer to understand why it is that active agencies of foreign propaganda, such as the Friends of New Germany, and other friends of nazism and fascism can meet and parade in uniform unmolested, while the mere mention of communism starts a panic in certain patriotic and civic circles.

CHARLES WILLIAMS.

Washington, Nov. 7.

To the Editor of the Post—Sir: General Fries, smugly satisfied, flaunts his misguided patriotism in the faces of those who realize the shortcomings of our educational system and aim to rectify and improve them. There have always been such of his, this intolerant minority, who from fear and ignorance, have tabooed other phases of knowledge.

Let us cast aside all pretenses! The children of today seek enlightenment! It is their inborn right to ask for and expect to receive the unbiased truth!

Our Government is not so sacred and so free from evil that it cannot be criticized and compared with others. Intelligent criticism, for the betterment of conditions, can be accomplished only by providing the facts of the various forms of government now in existence. LEONARD MOULTON.

Washington, Nov. 7.

Touchdown! Touchdown!

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I noticed, in looking over your column, "Season's Leading Football Teams," that in figuring up Georgia Tech's scores you failed to count six points. Where I went to school they taught us that 33, 32, 6, 6, 0 and 13 added gave a total of 90.

Being from Atlanta, I don't like to see the school lose six points in a newspaper after working so hard for them on the field. I hope you will correct this error.

G. BROOKS MITCHELL.

Washington, Nov. 4.

For The Preservation Of Democracy.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: More power to you for your directness in drawing attention of the country to the ridiculousness of these professional attacks on the so-called Reds.

There was a time when such attacks were considered quite the thing for good Americans to do, not that any great good was accomplished, but because the times required that some so-called Americans publicize their patriotism!

In Washington we have a few of the category mentioned who, unable to attain front page publicity in any other manner, usually get it by telling the world what great patriots they are. Indirectly, of course, by attacking the mythical Reds! They belong to a number of outstanding lodges, to civic organizations, and usually hold down some high office in the American Legion.

I did my bit for Uncle Sam in 1918 and I am a member of the American Legion and it makes me tired to hear these professional patriots harping year after year about what good citizens they are. The attitude of the American Legion in this matter also disgusts me when there are so many avenues of real benefit that might be stressed for the welfare of the country and the people, without chasing red herrings in order to gratify ambitions of those who have crept to high places in the soldier organization because the rank and file have evidently been unable to distinguish between real patriotism and the counterfeit kind that capitalizes self.

The particular gentleman who is now trying to inject professional patriotism into the city school system at the expense of proper education is a gentleman who was also one of the outstanding leaders here some years ago in boosting the K. K. K., which will enable those who do not know to acquaint themselves with the particular type of poison gas he can usually be expected to unloose if given the opportunity. HARRY F. FIELDS.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Liberals and progressives owe The Post a vote of thanks for its reasoned and potent editorials and cartoons on Washington's educational responsibilities. They have gone far toward disclosing the futility of efforts to make a curricular mountain of intellectual intolerance out of a communistic molehill. RAY H. EVERETT.

Washington, Nov. 8.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please accept my gratitude for your stand on the "Red menace" as seen by Gen. Fries in our public schools. Also for Mr. Schriftgiesser, than whom there is no better. Every year he gets peppier and peppier.

I hope he wrote the superb editorial of October 31 on the subject. (Editor's note: He didn't). Yesterday his Williams College article is to be highly commended, and today, the one on the school board meeting. If liberty and democracy in any measure are to be preserved in this country it will be largely through the efforts of newspaper men. W. P. MACKENZIE.

The Post Impressionist

We Reveal Ourselves.

WE have just received one of the most touching and flattering communications that—having due regard to every last postscript in our enormous fan mail—ever reached this Column. The letter comes from an utter stranger, a celebrated scholar. Yet it is long, intimate; it is inspired by intense interest in our deepest emotions, highest concerns, lightest whims. And it places a proper appraisement upon our place in literature.

* * *

He is well known as Stanford's professor of psychology, author of "Effects of Hookworm Disease on Mental Development of Children," "Vocational Aptitude of Second Generation Japanese." He was once commissioner for classification of United States Army personnel, is still an expert on recognition-memory. But we have never met him in the flesh, never written to him—have now for the first time been written to by him.

* * *

Despite all of which, and our columnar anonymity, he sympathetically wants to know all about us. He wants to know some things about us about which we are not sure ourselves. He seeks the secret of our success and the points of agreement between our character and the characters of other successes.

* * *

His quest covers seven pages. If it weren't for his pulse-speeding purpose, we'd consider two or three of his questions rather too personal. He asks our sex, whether we deliberately chose our metier, how far we got at school.

He inquires: "What occupations have you day-dreamed of entering? He provides a list which we are to check: "Actor, astronomer, auctioneer, auto repairman, bank teller, editor, floorwalker, Governor, music teacher, undertaker, K. of C. worker"—altogether, an exact hundred.

* * *

Well, after "editor," "undertaker" seems tautological. As "Indian chief" wasn't included, we couldn't conscientiously check a single item—though, had "Psychology Professor" been there, we might have ticked that.

* * *

Dr. Strong has a list of studies, too: How did we react to its subjects while we were still capable of education?

We confessed to preferences for art, Bible study, dramatics, economics, composition, history, literature, military drill, nature study, penmanship, philosophy. We professed indifference to the sciences. And we told him we disliked spelling and all forms of mathematics—including bookkeeping.

In reply to further lists we revealed a distaste for clock repairing. We didn't feel peculiar in our antipathy to "adjusting a carburetor, writing letters," job-hunting, "pursuing bandits, saving money"—didn't mind owning a distaste for "looking at a collection of rare laces."

* * *

It was different when the Professor asked about speech-making, cabinetmaking, kitchen gardening, adjusting other people's troubles. We admitted, too—under pressure—that "the three important factors affecting" our work were salary, security, praise.

However, to his inquiry which we should rather have been—Burbank, Caruso, Edison, Ford, Morgan, Pershing, Taft or Wanamaker—we responded that we were reconciled to being none of them. Nor would we say whether we cared to be "called a nickname:" the Doctor didn't specify what nickname. It seemed absurd for him to demand whether we enjoyed regular hours: aren't we a newspaperman? . . . And, no matter about his benevolent intentions, how could this cross-examiner ask if we "enjoyed being let alone?"

* * *

Take your own case: "What is your impression of women cleverer than you are?" Or are you sure there aren't any?

Are you fond of "optimists, conservatives, spendthrifts, communicative folk, foreigners, methodical persons, well-dressed persons, persons who don't believe in evolution, persons who talk about themselves?" We are. Aren't you indifferent to athletes? And can you stand people who are "progressive, energetic, absent-minded, quick-tempered, or cautious"—or people who are "natural leaders" or "have gold teeth?"

* * *

We may as well confess that, in putting such queries, Dr. Strong's solicitude was not quite confined to the Post-Impressionist. His idea is that, if he can first discover the composite character of Successful Men in each line of work, and if he can next find out the individual characters of students in Stanford—why, then he can tell each student whether he has more than a Chinaman's chance on any given line.

Still, we remain infinitely touched and serenely flattered. Having replied to so many of the inquiries, we may feel naked, but we know that we are a Success.

The only other thing we should like to know is how Dr. Strong would answer his own questionnaire.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Geneva, Nov. 9.

OUR subject is an earnest French wine grower from Saumur who has been calling on the American trade in New York and Boston and who is naive enough to hope that he will live to see a day when the American people, including Mr. Roosevelt's Common Man, will drink and appreciate wine and shun the cocktail which pickles the palate, as he says, and even avoid the cigarette for several hours before indulgence in wine. Our subject says the cigarette has a tendency to fry or braise the tongue. Therefore, on mornings when he is engaged to judge the quality of wine by tasting the same he refrains from smoking until his work is done.

His name is Baron Raymond de Luze, and he owns 18 acres of vines, the entire output of which he has just sold to American dealers. His is a sparkling wine, something like champagne. Your correspondent encountered him aboard the Ile de France en route to Europe.

It is an odd experience to come upon a farmer with an 18-acre patch whose crop is such that he can afford to go all the way to the United States on a fast, expensive boat, put himself in at hotels, ride the trains and buy a few wine dinners for his prospects merely to sell the produce of his 18 acres. For if the Baron were in cotton or wheat or parsley in the United States, with only 18 acres under his plow, he would hardly find it worth while to go farther than the county seat to market his crop, and that in his own flivver. And if he were to buy a meal for a prospective customer it probably would amount to no more than a hamburger and a cup of coffee at the lunch wagon.

OF course, the Baron is one who can shut his eyes, roll a glass of wine under his nose, breathe deeply and tell you which side of whose hill it came from and how long ago. But for all I know there may be wheat farmers and parsley men who can do almost as much in their own respective lines. Although the good Baron de Luze is a farmer in a certain sense of the word, raising a product which comes from the soil, he is a dress-suit farmer and world traveler of aristocratic bearing and never to be considered in comparison with the mud-stained hay-shaker of the United States who thought he was somebody when he put a bathtub in his home and sent his son to the State College of Agriculture.

People do not ask who grew the wheat which goes into their bread or the cotton in their undershirts or in what year. There is a great difference there. For in wine the year is important, and even Americans feel a thrill of pride in their sophistication when they have learned at considerable cost in money and heartburn to guess when a wine was grown without squinting at the label on the bottle. For all the insistence of the Frenchmen that wine is a simple food and not a rite, all the literature on the subject tends to baffle and intimidate those very Americans to whom the customer appeal has been addressed since repeal.

THE Baron has given me a little book which lists hundreds of wines according to the regions, even the very acres which produced them, and their years, with a further important distinction as to whether they were bottled on their own home grounds or elsewhere in an assembling plant. The book says a certain wine is "still hard but getting better." Another is "dryer than its neighbors." It speaks of "body" and "finesse." One authority says it is a crime to drink a certain wine iced and an indecency to drink other wine in the noble company of Montrachet. Under the circumstances the American runs a grave risk of committing a serious offense.

Can this be salesmanship? Can any wine be so sublime that it were a crime to drink other wine in its presence? And if so is it not, perhaps, as bad an error to wear silk socks grown in Japan, crop of 1931, in the same ensemble with a cotton undershirt, crop of 1926, from the fields of Zeke Which, of Corinth, Miss.?

But probably the Baron is doomed to disappointment, for he is challenging a national taste for simple, fighting liquors, complicated with whipped cream, house paint cherries and pineapple slabs which existed long before prohibition and became a strong national habit during the long rebillion. He resents a product which reeks of mystery and fancy manners and preaches temperance to a people who drink only to get tight.

• • • •

AS a connoisseur, the Baron prescribes a small splash of champagne before dinner, a few delicate passes at a glass of white wine with the fish and a few sturdy licks at a red wine with the meat, followed by champagne with the dessert and brandy with the coffee. He knows nothing about the traditional American meal of six whiskl sours followed by a T-bone steak with fried potatoes, washed down with rye and ginger ale.

I would give something for the movie rights, with sound, to the scene of consternation on an Illinois Central diner should the Baron put himself down to order a correct dinner from a wine list consisting of canned Martinis and Manhattans, sherry, port, whisky and gin.

Philippine Problem

Island Government Invokes Anti-Alien Law To Wrest Rich Davao Properties From Japanese But Meets With Little Success.

By Vicente Albano Pacis.
Special Correspondence to The Post.

Manila.

MAKING its second thrust in 15 years against the so-called Japanese menace in the Islands, the Philippine government has again found it necessary to retreat temporarily. For the Japanese elements have shown their powers of resistance and, as 15 years ago, the government has been taken aback.

Land is the present bone of contention. After investigating and proving to its satisfaction that Japanese individuals and corporations in the Philippines have been acquiring public lands by circumventing the laws banning aliens from the public domains, the government decreed the cancellation of leases granted in the names of Filipinos and Amricans but which are actually in the control of Japanese.

Most of the holdings involved are in Davao, Mindanao, where at least 7,000 Japanese have settled, controlling the economic life of the province and dominating strategic Davao Bay, the southern gateway of the Philippines.

It is interesting to note that the government's action affecting the Japanese is part of the efforts of the present secretary of agriculture and commerce to enforce the land laws more strictly. Another and earlier effect of his efforts was the repossession of the landed estate of Gen. Emilio Aguinaldo due to unpaid installments, a decision which, according to many observers, led the general vainly to seek the presidency of the Commonwealth. As President-elect Manuel L. Quezon is the Filipino head of the administration, Aguinaldo is said to have believed that Quezon had had a hand in the matter and forthwith sought his revenge.

• • • •

WHILE the government never relented in the case of Aguinaldo and took back his lands, including thousands of pesos' worth of improvements, it seems to be backing out in its action against the Japanese. Reports reaching Manila the other day stated that 5,000 members of the Davao Japanese Association had held an all-day mass meeting to denounce the cancellation order of the government. Sensational news dispatches reported the matter in a graver aspect, stating that the Davao Japanese had become restive and threatening and might stage a sort of a local uprising, thus forcing Tokyo's intervention.

The truth is that the Davao Japanese behaved respectfully, denouncing the order, it is true, but not hurling threats to the government. What the dispatches missed was that M. Furukawa, leading the Japanese in the province, had been secretly sent to Tokyo to seek Japanese intervention and that at this very moment, apparently as a result of Furukawa's efforts, an official of the foreign office in Tokyo, attached to the American division, Eija Wajima by name, is in Davao investigating the Japanese side of the matter.

Shortly after the Japanese mass meeting, however, the government suspended its cancellation order, pending, it was stated, further study of the Japanese angle of the problem.

• • • •

THE Philippine government's activities tending to correct anomalies in the application of the land law is regarded as due to the fact that in the independence law, the control of the public domain is for the first time left entirely in the hands of the insular Legislature. Up to now, the Legislature may legislate on tariff and land matters but the President of the United States has the ultimate power on such legislation and must approve all bills of this nature before they may become valid as law. In the independence act, Congress provides for the devolution to the islands of the ultimate power over the public domain, though it continues to reserve power in tariff matters for Washington.

Although, technically speaking, the present "land purge" is not the actual start of the Philippines with the new grant of powers, it can be construed as having been motivated by it. If this is true, the islands, instead of starting with a bang, began with a fumble. With Tokyo concerned and Washington, according to reports, adopting a hands-off policy, Manila has shown signs of weakening in the face of Japanese displeasure.

It is not the first time, however, that this has happened. During the World War, when the prices of hemp, so essential to the navies of the world, soared to unprecedented levels, the Japanese began to colonize Davao quietly. When the war was over, they had settled, acquired or squatted on practically one-third of the agricultural area of the province. The Legislature awoke to the situation about 1918 and immediately passed the so-called anti-alien law which prohibited acquisition of parts of the public domain by aliens.

• • • • •

SOME 30 of the leading Japanese corporations were caught napping by the law. They had not perfected their titles to the lands they occupied and, under the new law, they could have been summarily deprived of their holdings. But the Japanese waged a quiet fight in Manila, Tokyo and Washington, and won. Francis Burton Harrison, then Governor General, urged the Legislature to pass a special law legalizing the holdings of practically all these corporations, and the Legislature complied. The Japanese argued good faith; they pointed out that they had come to Davao to help in the economic development of the country, spending their capital, and importing labor.

In the present case, however, the anti-alien land law was in full force during all the time that the Japanese went around it in order to acquire the areas they needed. Their favorite method has been to set up dummy corporations ostensibly with Americans or Filipinos owning the majority of the stocks. Another equally successful scheme has been for Japanese citizens to marry natives of the place and then to acquire portions of the public domain in the names of the new wives. The situation today is different from the situation 15 years ago, but visible signs show that the Philippine government is still as susceptible to pussyfooting.

Byrd Held Pattern For A. B. Chandler

Kentucky Governor-Elect Admirer of Virginia.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Richmond, Nov. 10.—Democratic Gov-elect A. B. (Happy) Chandler of Kentcky, was reported here today to be an admirer of the Virginia government, and to have pledged himself to reorganizing Kentucky's government on the Virginia pattern.

Prior to his election this week Chandler was quoted as saying reforms in Virginia under former Gov. Harry F. Byrd "brought about probably the best government in the Nation," and that "I propose to do in Kentucky what Gov. Byrd did in Virginia."

He was quoted as saying the people of Virginia "voted to make more than 13 fundamental changes in the law and constitution that brought about the reorganization and reduced the number of boards and commissions from 100 to 8, bringing about balanced budgets.

Mrs. Broun Elected.

Leonardtown, Md., Nov. 10.—The Bretons Bay Rural Woman's Club at a meeting held here elected Mrs. Bascom Broun president; Mrs. Lester Mattingly, vice president; Mrs. Rita Wise, secretary; Miss Mary Leach, treasurer; Mrs. Philip H. Dorsey, reporter, and Mrs. Paul Bowen, parliamentarian.

Armistice Day

By An Ex-Soldier

EVERY Armistice Day I remember an episode of the war which is stranger and perhaps more terrible than anything I have ever read in fiction. It has no moral, but it is true.

Before we entered the war I was driving an ambulance for a period in the Ypres sector, in a unit attached to the British army. There I met a young Australian officer whom I shall call Humphreys. He was a lieutenant—about 20—and a remarkable linguist. His proficiency in German caused him to be used in examining all German prisoners taken by his regiment.

One winter night a British patrol brought in a German officer who had been captured from the opposite trenches, at that time manned by a Prussian outfit. Humphreys was called upon to examine the man and I happened to be present. When the two men were brought together everybody in the farmhouse headquarters burst out laughing. Humphreys and the German might almost have been twins, they were so similar in age, appearance and height.

The laughter ceased, however, as soon as it developed from the German officer's papers that he was a Bavarian, who had been attached to the Prussian regiment opposite the very night of his capture. He incautiously admitted that he knew nobody in that regiment. A tense hush fell over the little group.

"All right," said Humphreys to the colonel. "I'll do it."

In the German's uniform and with his papers, Humphreys slid over the parapet 15 minutes later and disappeared toward the German trenches a couple of hundred yards away. It was a week before he returned, and several years before I heard the story, when I met him by one of those coincidences that do happen, in London.

• • • •

THE scheme worked marvellously. Humphreys reached the German trenches, reporting as Lieut. Schnabel, and gave just enough harmless information about the British dispositions to receive high commendation from the Prussian colonel. Then he settled down to learn everything he could as a spy in a position of incomparable advantage.

He found the Germans a very friendly lot and made particular friends with a young Privat-Dozent, or instructor, from the University of Bonn, who was a subaltern in the regiment. This Lieut. Schmidt, as I shall call him, was tremendously interested in English literature, and in the dugout he and Humphreys engaged in many of those rambling philosophical conversations which were the greatest mental safeguard for the intellectual war-time soldier. Late one evening, as they were discussing some point about Shakespeare, Humphreys noticed a strange expression pass over the face of Schmidt. Then he realized that, without knowing it, he had ceased to talk German and, in order to shade the meanings of his point, had dropped into English.

He tried to carry it off lightly and Schmidt seemed to accept his explanation. But he noticed that from that time on he was never left alone. Either Schmidt or some other German officer was constantly beside him and constantly asking him what seemed, to his naturally high-strung state of mind, exceedingly searching questions.

Two nights later, when his nerves were about gone, a chance to escape appeared to offer. He was assigned to make a pre-daylight inspection tour of the front-line trenches at a point from which it would have been relatively easy to get into no-man's-land. But as he was about to start, Lieut. Schmidt appeared. "I am going with you," he said. "It's better to make these trips in pairs."

• • • •

IN the extreme salient of the front line trench there was a single sentry. Schmidt sent him back to the supporting trench on an obviously concocted errand. Then he turned to Humphreys. Terror, as the Australian told me later, overwhelmed him. He whipped out his revolver, pressed it hard to the German's stomach to muffle the explosion, scrambled over the parapet, and in five minutes was back in the British trenches.

• • • •

HUMPHREYS brought in a report of the utmost value to the British, and in due time he was awarded a medal before the regiment drawn up on parade. The medal he threw into a Belgian ditch. For weeks after the episode he could not sleep except under the influence of drugs. Finally a kindly bullet sent him to England and out of the rest of the war. He still considers himself a murderer, rather than a hero, and when I heard the full story years later he was planning to look up the parents of Lieut. Schmidt and ask their forgiveness.

We all advised him not to do so, and I imagine he is still filling the minor clerical position in London which he held when I last saw him.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

1936 Election Years Prophecy.
(By El-mah Twitch-el, the Noted Seer.)

By January there will be a reshuffling of cards in the New Deal and the Administration will stop playing with the deuces wild.

President Roosevelt, as a result of autumnal election results, personal observations and reports from his scouts, will realize that the people are tiring of the card game and want to play something else.

Even the Democrats will have to admit that the hocus-pocus days are over and that any sleight-of-hand act gets tiresome after the first three years.

The Republicans will start dancing in the street, but in their excitement they will forget that, despite his mistakes, Franklin D. Roosevelt is still widely regarded by great masses of voters as a leader who might have done worse.

• • • •

There will be an unmistakable disposition on the part of Americans to get off the revolving floor and grab hold of something stable while their heads clear.

Even the beneficiaries of the Government by jack-pot system will begin to suspect that it can't go on forever and show a tendency to admit (in private) that it might be a good idea to get back to accurate bookkeeping, personal initiative and fact facing.

• • • •

Franklin Delano Roosevelt will be characteristically stubborn a little peeved and somewhat slow to admit he was steering by a defective compass. But he will wake up in time, get the ship on a different course, calm the passengers and silence the cries of "Throw that skipper out!"

Millions of voters who went for F. D. R. in 1932 will flock back to the Republican Party, and it will look at times as if the Grand Old Party was going to move in again, but Roosevelt will tone down his New Deal program so much that, compared to his 1934 radio talks, his speeches will seem like extracts from the public utterance of the late Mark Hanna.

• • • •

By the Fourth of July the Democrats will even be advocating the balanced budget as against the wheel of fortune, old-fashioned bookkeeping as against bubble blowing, and regulation cash register ringing as against bedtime stories.

The Republicans will point out the obvious inconsistencies, but they will be up against the plain and harrowing fact that Mr. Roosevelt has the best radio voice in politics.

Roosevelt will be elected, but by such a comparatively close squeak that for the rest of his life he will shy at professors, break into a cold sweat at the sight of boy economists and hide under the stove at the mention of the words "Brain Trust."

P. S.—If we're wrong sue us.

The elephant now goes 'round,
The bands begin to play,
The boys around the New Deal cage
Had better keep away.

Legislative Posts Vacant In Virginia

Organization of Senate Presents Biggest Problem.

Assembly Meets Jan. 1 on Tangled Social Security Plans.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 10.—The Legislature elections over, Virginia's Presidential and Congressional election year session of the Legislature today was poised to start its 1936 session in January under the handicaps of reorganization and widely divergent views on social security legislation.

Senate organization looms particularly as a problem, although Lieut. Gov. James H. Price will continue in the presiding chair he has held since 1930. But a heavy committee toll has been taken by elections, resignations, death and withdrawal.

Major posts in the House also are to be filled, including that of Speaker, for which Ashton Dovell is slated to succeed Sinclair Brown, of Salem, who did not offer for reelection.

No Inauguration.

The widely varying views on social security have been attested in campaign statements and the State Chamber of Commerce's taxation hearings. Methods of financing it are especially controversial.

In contrast, however, is the fact that there will be no gubernatorial inauguration to impede the Legislature's progress, as was the case in 1934, when a new Governor entered after the session started, with new tax views.

The Governor's advisory committee has been working on its version of social security legislation, but a measure meeting the many views is viewed as improbable.

Loss of 15 veterans in the Senate has left vacant chairmanships of the body's three most powerful committees—roads, public institutions and education, and courts of justice. The late Senator S. L. Ferguson of Appomattox was chairman of the roads committee, and Senator W. O. Rogers of Waverly, who was regarded as likely to succeed him, did not offer for reelection. Senator George W. Layman, of Craig, a power in the Senate, and chairman of the institutions and education committee, went down before Republican opposition. Senator Worth Smith, of Louisa, chairman of courts of justice, did not offer for reelection, and Senator John W. Eggleston, of Norfolk, who probably would have succeeded him, has been appointed to the Supreme Court.

Besides these, Senator A. P. Staples of Roanoke, who last year forced through the Peery tax bill, now is attorney general. Senator Hunter Miller, of Bedford, was a primary victim, and now is a member of the ABC board. Senator William H. East, of Augusta, another veteran, did not offer for reelection.

Senator William A. Garrett, of Henry, chairman of the finance committee before some of the younger assemblymen were born; Senator Saxon W. Holt, of Newport News, and Senator Henry T. Wickham, of Hanover, are among the comparatively few veterans remaining.

Lost to the House is Speaker Brown. Dovell's elevation to his place will leave vacant chairmanships of the appropriations and privileges and elections committees, as well as his floor leadership.

Other vacancies are those left by State Conservation Commissioner Wilbur C. Hall, former finance chairman; Motor Vehicle Commissioner John Q. Rhodes, education chairman; W. Stuart Moffett, whose election to the Senate left vacant the agriculture chairmanship; the late Daniel Coleman, general laws chairman, and J. W. Witten, another delegate to become a senator, chairman of cities and towns. Vivian Page, also elected to the Senate, left the courts committee chair vacant.

Ohio Paintings In First Show At University

Special Dispatch to The Post.

University, Va., Nov. 10.—The first of a projected series of monthly exhibitions of paints by contemporary American artists was placed on display last week at the University of Virginia's new Bayly Art Museum.

The special showing for this month, arranged by Prof. Edmund S. Campbell, curator, is a group of 32 oil paintings by 25 leading Cleveland, Ohio, artists. The subjects for the exhibition were selected by the staff of the Cleveland Museum of Art, and include the first and third prize winner at the Ohio State Fair.

Collections which will follow in the series will come from other sections of the country, and presented for the purpose of giving the university public an opportunity to view the current works of artists of important cities.

The special exhibitions will augment the university's permanent collection of more than 100 portraits and statues and many other objects of art and heirlooms which have already been accepted for the museum by the faculty committee. These include portraits and busts of men associated with the university since its opening session in 1825, works of old European artists, a highly prized portrait of George Washington painted from life by Rembrant Peale, and reproductions in oil of other Revolutionary leaders.

Jury Inquiry On Gambling Waited Today

Demonstration of Slot Machines Scheduled at Hagerstown.

Murder of Buchanan at Race Meeting Also Is Up.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Nov. 10.—The November grand jury convenes here tomorrow morning with bookmaking, slot machines and other forms of gambling scheduled to be brought to its attention.

It is understood that the members of the grand jury may be given first-hand knowledge of the chances players of slot machines have by a demonstration. Authorities moving several of these machines, recently seized, into the courthouse last week.

The grand jury likewise may be called upon to indict under the Washington County anti-mookmaking law, enacted by the last Legislature. Police have made at least one raid on alleged bookmaking establishment and obtained the names of a number of persons found in the place. It was stated by the raiding party that these names were wanted for summons before the November grand jury.

Now in Appeals Court.

The anti-bookmaking law is now before the Maryland Court of Appeals, an opinion of Chief Judge D. Lindley Sloan finding the act constitutional having been apealed by counsel for Harry D. Miggins, who sought to enjoin the State's attorney and sheriff from molesting operation of mookmaking establishment here. Later his place was raided, and Miggins taken into custody, but he was released on a writ of habeas corpus at Cumberland because of a defective warrant.

A number of handbooks, it is understood, have been operated almost continuously here since the bookmaking establishments were closed last June 1 when the anti-bookmaking act became effective.

Heavier penalties for those who maintain slot machines in their establishments also may be urged at this session of court. A number of proprietors of stores where slot machines were found have been arrested for the second offense within a month. They were fined $25 for the second offense.

Murder Is Up.

The murder of Oavid L. Buchanan, aged rooming house proprietor, will also be investigated by the grand jury, which must decide whether or not John Burke, Philadelphia race track follower, held as a suspect, shall be indicted. Burke, who was arrested in the rooming house at Martinsburg, W. Va., where he was staying during the Charles Town race meet, has been in jail since.

Burke was one of several roomers at the house operated by Buchanan during the Hagerstown race meeting, who were questioned. Buchanan was found dead in a room adjoining his office, his head battered. He was known to carry considerable money and when the body was found he had only a small amount of change in his clothing.

West Virginia Seeking Jobs For 38,500

10,300 on Relief Already Employed on WPA Projects.

Nov. 25 Set as Deadline for Hiring Rest of Quota.

By Robert H. Horner.
A Special Correspondent.

Charleston, W. Va., Nov. 10.—How to put to work upon WPA projects 48,000 persons from the Virginia relief rolls by November 25 is the problem confronting F. Witcher McCullough, State director.

McCullough has received from Washington authority to spend $17,123,000 upon such projects as may seem to him worthwhile and coming within the requirements of the emergency program. This money, he says, is all he will receive, and with it he must keep his quota of men at work until next June 30, at which time all projects must be completed, according to his orders.

To date McCullough's organization has placed in jobs on minor projects scattered over the State 10,300 men from the relief rolls, leaving him still to place within the specified time 38,500.

Few Jobs Approved.

Meanwhile, he has approved few projects that may be started within the allotted time, he is expected to launch an extensive program this week.

Most of the projects he will approve, however, will be small jobs, as the director has stated that there is virtualy no skilled labor upon the relief rolls. Late last week he announced he had postponed approval of a $3,057,680 program to build armories and State police barracks in larger cities of the State, because they do not meet requirements. An appeal to the natoinal WPA director by Adjt. Gen. F. Guy Ash to overrule McCullough on his ruling against armories, is now pending at Washington.

Cullough's organizati n h,eer. Cullough's organization, there are 20,000 other employable persons on relief rolls. What is to become of them when the Federal Government withdraws its direct relief to the State November 15 has not been explained.

Kump Awaits Order.

Gov. Kump as far has received no officialadvice from Washington that the State will be responsible for its own relief work after December 15, although, it is said, the State department of welfare is prepared to take over the work as far as it can, either by November 15 or by December 1.

Prices of Apples Gain 25 Cents Box

W. Virginia Market Aided by Northwest Freeze.

By the Associated Press.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Nov. 10.—The apple market here is stiffening noticeably, with a nickle-to-dime advance in prices on Staymen and Grimes apparent, apple salesmen report.

The increased strength is attributed mainly to the freeze over the Northwest apple belt, which took an estimated 5,000 carloads of apples off the market—principally Delicious, Winesap and Rome Beauty. The Northwest selling agencies immediately boosted their Delicious and Winesap prices 25 cents a box.

Staymen are being sold here for $1 per bushel tub, from cold storage, which nets a nickle or a dime better than the earlier prices ranging from 70 cents up to 85 cents; while Grimes Golden sales are reported at 90 cents a tub. Grimes sold as low as 55 and 60 cents, f.o.b., during the harvest season.

Farmer Is Held Hit-Run Victim, Not Murdered

Ira Blentlinger, 54, Was Found Dead Near Frederick.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., Nov. 10.—County officials early today decided that Ira Blentlinger, 54-year-old New Market farmer, was not murdered but was the victim of a hit-and-run driver.

Blentlinger died on the way to the hospital here after being picked up by a passing truck at 10 p. m. yesterday.

His brother, Sheridan Blentlinger, identified the body and told officials that his brother had left New Market to walk to his home shortly before he was found dying by the road.

The fact that his clothing had no dirt on it, and that his hat showed no signs of being soiled or battered, led officials to believe that a hole in his head might have been inflicted with a weapon. Scratches on his hands indicated, however, that he had been thrown forward and that he slid on his hands.

An inquest was deemed unnecessary and arrangements were made for funeral services tomorrow morning at his home. Burial will be in Mount Olivet Cemetery here.

In addition to his brother, who identified him, the victim is survived by his widow, Mrs. Heart May Blentlinger; three daughters, Mrs. Thomas Watkins, New Market; Mrs. John Poole, Walkersville, and Mrs. Russell Lawson, Fountain Mills; two sons, William Blentlinger and Eldred Blentlinger, at home; three sisters, Mrs. Roy Burke, Miss Marian Blentlinger and Mrs. Frank Shook, this city. He was a son of Adams Theodore Blentlinger, who died recently.

Cities Brace To Aid Needy In Dominion

Each Must Maintain Own Relief Clients Now, Aid Says.

Assembly to Be Urged to Pass 11-Point League Plan.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 10.—Virginia cities are bracing themselves to undertake the "serious problem" of providing relief for their unemployables when the VERA discontinues direct relief on December 1, Morton L. Wallerstein, executive Secretary of the League of Virginia municipalities, said today.

While detailed reports of the prospective relief problems of the various cities have not been filed with headquarters of the league here, Wallerstein said, officials of the organization are being informed that the end of Federal relief will present a critical situation to municipal authorities.

Each city will have to meet its relief demands as best it can for the present, the league spokesman said, as no assistance to hard-pressed city treasuries is in sight until the convening of the General Assembly in January.

Advocate Program.

In preparation for the session, the league legislative committee is formulating a campaign in behalf of the 11-point program adopted by the league convention at Fredericksburg.

The central point of the League's agenda as far as financial affairs are concerned, Wallerstein said, is the request for increased State appropriations for the operation of the public school system

This point will be pressed for a two-fold purpose, the Secretary said: First, to decrease the school expenditures of municipalities in order to lessen the tax burden on real estate, and second, to free more city funds for local relief purposes.

Discusses Gas Tax.

Other points in the program include recommendations that gas tax receipts be "more equitably distributed so that the cities and towns should have a proper participation therein," that the highway department construct and maintain all streets forming part of the highway system in towns of less than 3,500; that all real estate of public service and public utility corporations be assessed by the State corporation commission in conformity with the general assessment policies of each political subdivision; that the General Assembly of 1936 reapportion the State into Senate and House districts as required by the Virginia constitution; that the State set up a State-wide police communication system in co-operation with local systems.

Skin Troubles Are Diagnosed By New Device

Instrument to Be Demonstrated at a Downtown Store This Week.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

AN ALL-SEEING eye! That's one way to describe the new scientific instrument that sees into the skin and detects the underlying cause of skin faults. This week it's going to be in a downtown store, so here's your opportunity to find out all about your skin from A to Z.

This device, called Derma-Lens, was originated by a well-known beautician to be used for individual skin analysis. "Women must know the truth about their complexions if they are going to treat them scientifically," she said. "Because the Derma-Lens reveals the cause of skin troubles in many cases it is possible for the operator to advise the most effective treatment. In this way lines, wrinkles, large pores, blackheads and kindred beauty flaws may be traced to their source and the skin stands a far better chance of being restored to youthful loveliness in the quickest way possible!"

Derma-Lens is a clinical looking instrument with shining chromium accents, equipped with a system of finely adjusted lenses, mirrors, and lights that reveal the most minute variation from normal in the skin. The client looks through one end of the machine, and discovers for herself some of her major skin problems. The operator, looking through the opposite end, analyzes her skin scientifically, according to the defect revealed by the powerful lens, and advises the correct beauty procedure to be followed.

Even the woman with a youthful, normal skin will find the Derma-Lens analysis of great benefit since it determines the texture of the skin and thereby aids in the choice of preparations that will keep it looking its best. The lighting reveals the skin tone clearly so that the operator can determine the most flattering make-up colors for the individual type.

Men's Eau de Cologne.

A CERTAIN perfume house has long put out a men's eau de cologne with such a spicy, clean cut odor that it's tops in popularity. Now they are bottling this masculine fragrance in real he-man bottles. They are square cut and bound in leather just like a whisky flask.

The hostess who is looking for an appropriate prize for one of her men bridge guests will find this the ideal answer to her problem. It's conservatively priced.

Musical Powder Boxes.

THERE'S NO DOUBT about it, they're coming back in favor, the musical powder boxes! The toiletries buyer for one downtown store says she had a dozen or so on display in her department last week and they were gone in no time.

This week she has some more, and they're about the most melodious and ornamental little things you ever saw. They come in a sturdy metal with an unusual finish suggesting cloisonne. The second you remove the top, a spring is released and from somewhere inside comes a cheery tune.

She has one that almost sets you tripping the light fantastic to the tune of the "Big, Bad Wolf." Another could awaken you in the morning to the "Reveille."

End and Coffee Tables.

YOU'D NEVER GUESS that the long cardboard boxes on the counter in the notions department of a local store held tables. But they do! The tables are packed in pieces, for it's easy as anything to put them together. And once they're together, you'd never dream they came apart!

They're made of a very lightweight wood, and lacquered in a shiny black. On the tops are picturesque Japanese scenes.

These are perfect little end tables, or they may be used as handy tables. Some women like to use them by the window as a stand for potted plants.

The price is only $1.

Gleanings from Current Verse

Selected by Hope Ridings Miller.

To the Unknown Soldier.

I.

THERE is a tomb, above the broad Potomac's languid flow,
A shrine of widowed hopes—its epitaph,
"To the Unknown."
A residue of hallowed dust, that once had tramped with me,
The long perspective of the poplar roads of Picardy.

II.

There pilgrimage philosophers and kings and fools and I.
The king, to mourn a soldier, and the fool, to weep and hope
That such things might not be, while the philosopher exclaims,
"Unknown!" But I am neither Fool, Philosopher, nor King.

III.

Yet still shall I be standing there when they are gone—
Alone, persistent grim—sarcastic, my soul pledged to him in full,
That King, Philosopher, and Fool, with Crown or Book or Tears,
Shall find no more a comrade's carcass for their stately tomb.

Heart.

OUT of silence sobs the slow
Drumming heart's dark dynamo.
Cased in layers, wall on wall,
The heart knows naught of merciful,
Of dutiful, of good, of wise;
It has no ears; it has no eyes;
Nor any breath that's passionate;
The heart can neither love nor hate.
Encased in fibers firmly wound,
It knows no sight; it knows no sound.
And all that it can have or know
Is chained by pulses quick or slow,
Thought out of silence sobs the low
Drum of that dark dynamo.

Scatter in Death.

WHEN I had died I was a waterfall
Flying my flag over the jagged wall,
Unfurled I ran to meet
The precipice
With spangled waters
Silvering the abyss,
Across my plumage
Colored sunlight blew
And buried mist clung to me,
But I broke through.

I plunged forever through the waiting air,
Jetted in showers of spray, love and despair,
Cascaded the passions
Pent in the skull,
Dissonant company
Channeled too full,
Scattered in death all fury and suspense,
Fling out, bright drops,
Into inconsequence!

Apology.

I NEVER have been one to share in speech
The thoughts that crowd my world of solitude.
He travels best alone who needs must reach
Some meaning to life's strange brief interlude.
Forgive the seeming comradeship I lack.
Elusive is the soul, a star inwrought,
And never one can share the windswept track
With hermit-clad adventurers in thought.

If you would know what lies behind the mask
That greets you smiling in the mummer's show,
Ah, never draw too near, and never ask,
But search instead, I pray, if you must know,
The songs that I have written. Only there
I have the gift of speech, the need to share.

HIGH and tall the golden
And the scarlet bough;
Hill and tree are brightly
Warm and smiling now;
All my life beholden
To one perfect hour,
Breath of autumn lightly
Brushing leaf and flower.

Delicate the humor
Of a purling brook;
Even stones are colored
With a merry look;
Let none voice the rumor
Joy is silver-thin—
He must be a dullard
Who holds laughter in!

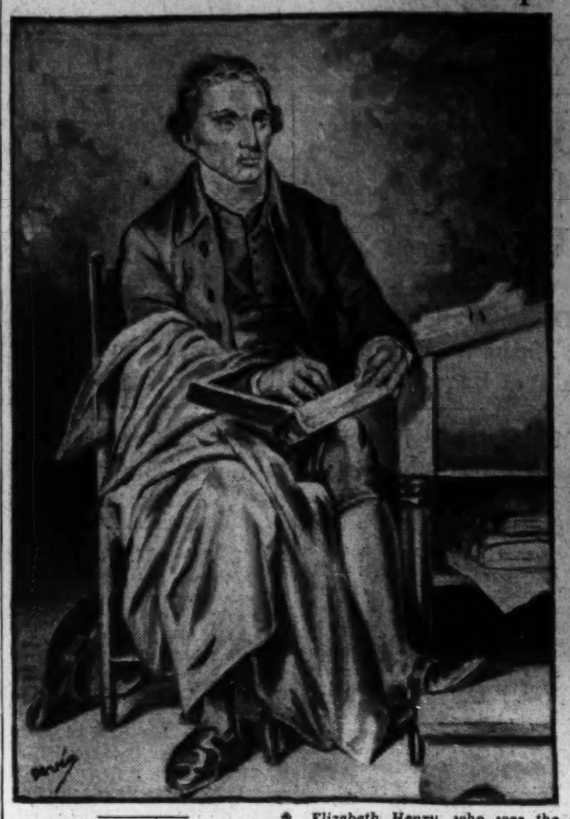
Half-Forgotten Romances of American History

Gen. William Campbell—Elizabeth Henry.



Elizabeth Henry, who was the inspiration and counselor of her famous brother, Patrick Henry (shown above), was visiting her brother in Williamsburg in 1775 when she met Capt. William Campbell, a fighter in the Indian Wars. They were married a year later. Campbell, who became a general in the Revolutionary Army, was known as the "hero of Kings Mountain."

Elizabeth Henry Feminine Alter Ego of Patrick, Devoted Brother.

By Elisabeth Ellicott Poe.

IT IS NOT always the wives of famous men who influence them greatly on their upward climb to renown. Sometimes even greater inspiration has come from a mother or a sister bound by the enduring tie of kindred blood. History is replete with incidents of great mothers who have had great sons, and no less a personage than Abraham Lincoln said of his mother, Nancy Hanks, "All that I am or hope to be I owe to my angel mother."

In like manner many great men have had great sisters and Patrick Henry, the fiery orator of the American Revolution, was blessed in this regard by the possession of a sister Elizabeth who often was called Henry's feminine ego.

In later years, when Patrick and Elizabeth were married to others, their lives grew somewhat apart, as was inevitable. But Elizabeth was always his favorite counselor, and she, in turn, took all her troubles to Patrick. Curiously enough, Elizabeth Henry had the same gifts of oratory and emotional speaking as did her more renowned brother, and James Madison once told this story of her. : He visited her when a candidate for the Presidency. He was a very small man and she was extremely tall for a woman. After she greeted him she placed a hand on his head, pressed him on his knees and prayed for him as the coming Chief Executive "I have heard all the first orators of America," declared Madison afterward, "but I have never heard an eloquence as great as that prayer of Elizabeth Henry on the occasion of my visit to her."

Ancestral Background.

Besides being the sister of her brother, so to speak, Elizabeth Henry was the heroine of a memorable romance with Gen. William Campbell the hero of King's Mountain.

Virginia genealogy gives a good accounting of the Henry ancestors. His mother was the widow, Sarah Winston Syme, of Studley—sturdy colonial stock this and his father, John Henry, who knew his Horace as well as his Bible, was of Celtic strain—hence the Patrick in his son's name. In civic life of the county he was prominent as county surveyor, major of militia, presiding magistrate and devoted adherent of the Anglican Church with his elder brother, Patrick, the rector of St. Paul's parish, Hanover.

John and Sarah Henry had two sons and five daughters. They were strictly brought up in that state of "life into which it had pleased God to call them" and Elizabeth was versed in the arts of the housewife by the time she was 15 and had acquired such meager learning as was available for girls in the Virginia of that day.

Betty Repulsed Suitors.

With Patrick she roamed the hills and dales and studied nature. The children saw the operation of law and order and beauty in the constant round of the seasons.

When Patrick was sixteen his father set him up as a cross-roads merchant. Elizabeth was much interested but she did not see so much of her brother and by this time the country swains had begun to engross her attention. Perhaps but for a chance meeting with William Campbell she might have gone the way of the least resistance and married one of the neighborhod beaux.

One by one she gently but firmly declined the wooings of the Virginia gentlemen who flocked about the hospitable Henry Home Mount Brilliant. In fact she declined so many of them that her relatives became a little alarmed as she got well into her twenties that she might join the ranks of spinsters who in that day qualified in that order after they had passed the 25-year mark.

"Old Maid" at 26.

In 1775 when Elizabeth was 26 and definitely regarded as an old maid in her family she went to Williamsburg to visit her brother Patrick, then a member of the Virginia forces with headquarters in that already ancient capital city. One day her brother brought home a caller, a very mountain of a man, 6 feet 2 inches tall, of superb physique, straight and soldierly in his bearing. He was Capt. William Campbell, from the Holston settlement in Fincastle County. His complexion was fair and his eyes were blue and he had a deferential and chivalrous air toward women.

Here was a man, indeed, and Elizabeth Henry, according to her lifelong habit of prayer, thanked God on her knees for him that very night. Behind him was a record of splendid service against the Indians with Col. Christian in the Dunmore expedition against the Indians.

It was to Patrick that Elizabeth first told the story of her love for William Campbell and no doubt he was confiding his attachment to a fellow officer about the same time. Their romance was a beautiful one. Patrick Henry wrote home to his stalwart mother the details of the son-in-law-to-be and in the spring of 1776 Elizabeth Henry and William Campbell were married. Even in the midst of the war days there was a merry wedding party at the Henry home when Betty became a bride.

Betty Henry Campbell endured all the hardships that befall women in war, the chief of which is the anxious waiting for news of their loved ones on the battle front. Step by step Campbell was advancing in military rank and was well thought of by both Washington and Lafayette. Meantime two children had been born to the pair, one surviving, a girl, Sarah, afterward wife of Gen. Francis Preston and mother of a distinguished line of men and women.

Known as a Hero.

War had taken its toll, though, on even the splendid physique of Gen. Campbell. While Elizabeth watched and prayed at his side he died at Rocky Mills, Col. John Syme's county seat in Hanover County, August 22, 1781, having gained by that time the title of the "hero of King's Mountain" and many other military honors.

The Spartan widow mourned him deeply but carried on in his name. Romance came to her again after her first grief was over and she found in Gen. William Russell, an associate of her husband's in the Continental Army, the consolation of a second love. They were married. Four children were born of this marriage. As Mme. Russell, as she was called, Elizabeth Henry became even more of a Virginia celebrity especially after she manumitted her slaves, gave up her lands to her children and kept a pulpit in her house where itinerant preachers might expound the Gospel. She lived to be 76 years old, dying on March 18, 1825, rejoicing in the Republic her beloved brother and first husband had helped to found.

Candy Is Poor Way to Induce Child to Sleep

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

Grandma had a habit of slipping a bit of candy into Sam's mouth after he was in bed. "Gives him something nice to think about while he is going to sleep."

It was only when the dentist began to make inquiries about Sam's diet in order to find out the reason for his teeth decaying so early that the bedtime candy was discovered and stopped, much to Grandma's indignation and Sam's regret.

Candy and sweets at bedtime are very apt to cause an acid condition of the mouth unless the teeth are cleansed and the mouth thoroughly rinsed after eating them. This precaution no little child can be expected to take. He probably falls asleep still sucking his sweet and has not the slightest notion why he wakes up with a dark brown taste in his mouth next morning.

A child does not need anything to make him sleep. He should be so healthily tired at bedtime that he falls asleep at once.

Teeth and mouth should be carefully cleansed at bedtime, and after that precaution has been taken nothing more to eat should be given unless it be an acid fruit juice. Orange, lemon, grapefruit, tomato and the malic acid contained in apples are all good for the digestion and will not harm the teeth if left on them. In fact, they are beneficial to the mouth. The body juices very quickly convert these acids to alkalis which aid digestion and preserve the teeth.

But milk, candy, cake—even bread and butter—have the opposite effect, and should therefore be avoided as nightcaps.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I read your very helpful and interesting column every day, and now I am going to ask you if you can help me, as you seem to know just where and how to get the information to help your readers.

* * * *

I have always had a very, very poor memory and as time goes on it is getting worse. I try so hard to remember and concentrate, but to no avail. The other day I delivered a message for a friend of mine, which I had to write down for fear of forgetting. I was unable to remember what the other party had told me, although I tried mighty hard. Also, when reading or listening to lectures, no matter how interesting the subject matter, I can scarcely remember what I have heard or read. It is very embarrassing and I would appreciate any suggestions you may be kind enough to offer. Perhaps some of your readers may have some helpful suggestions.

* * * *

Thanking you kindly for any advice you may see fit to give me through your interesting column, I am, very gratefully yours,

MRS. B. W. B.

Talk to Physician.

DEAR MRS. B. W. B.: The only safe and sane method to pursue in overcoming the condition you describe is to place yourself under the care of a good physician. Some organic or functional disturbance may be at the root of the ailment. Or it may be the result of intense and prolonged worry over some material or personal aspect of your life which you feel powerless to change. Perhaps you are in need of a stimulating, refreshing change of mental scene.

* * * *

Not long ago I read an account of a physician's advising a patient with just such a complaint as yours to drop all routine cares for a couple of hours each day and go shopping—if only window shopping—or to a picture show. I'm sure of one thing, however, and that is the sooner you stop worrying about, and concentrating on, your inability to remember or to concentrate, the sooner the condition will correct itself.

* * * *

The best way to free your mind of worry over the ailment is to place yourself, as I have already said, under the care of a first-class physician in whose judgment you have complete confidence, and follow his suggestions and prescriptions to the letter. You probably need to adopt a regimen of more regular hours, with a daily minimum of 10 hours' sleep, regular periods of rest or recreation out of doors, and to cultivate a philosophy of life which eliminates worry. It might be well to give up reading altogether for a time; and to forswear attendance upon lectures which tax the imagination and memory. But these are matters in which your physician can best advise you. M. H.

Who Is Mrs. W?

NOTE TO MRS. W.: To date, I have received ten telephone calls and two written replies to your appeal published in this column Friday, November 9, for a winter coat for a dependent invalid. This is a decided embarrassment of riches in the way of reader response, inasmuch as you are failing to supply me with your own name, address or telephone number. Won't you please do so at once? M. H.

Pleasant HOMES

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THE NICEST house on the block isn't an unmitigated blessing for the lady who lives there . . . if it's all complete to the last curtain tie-back. What a lady really enjoys about her home is fixing it up, and so it's a sad day for her when every last thing is finished. The only consolation is that by then the part you did first is beginning to need freshening up.

* * * *

A lady who lives in a house like that told us the other day, "Our house is furnished beautifully from tip to toe so I haven't the ghost of an excuse to make any drastic changes. But my fingers are just itching to do something to something! Thank goodness the chintzes in my bedroom are really faded beyond respectability and I can replace them. But I really long for something different—both in color and draping. The furniture is simple but lovely—mahogany. The floor has a dove gray broadloom carpet. I can have the walls repainted. What would you suggest?"

Our idea was to have the walls painted the color of tea roses . . . then use chintz with a white ground and a flowered pattern of hydrangea blue—or violet. For the draping, we though it might be nice to have ta wall drapery behind the beds (as sketched) of the same chintz . . . this could be arranged behind the dressing table, too. And all the chintzes for draperies and spreads finished off with white pletaed organdy ruffles.

Stabbing Pains Characterize Infected Pleura

Tubercular Bacillus Causes Malady in Walls of Lungs.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

COLDS rarely start in the bronchial tubes. On the contrary, infection usually manifests itself first in the nasal passages or the throat. If unchecked, and because there is an open pathway to the bronchi and the lungs, inflammation of these areas may follow along with cough and profuse expectoration. With the coming of cool and cold days and nights with blustery winds, we are much more prone to infections of the air passages. The surface of the body chills quickly, resistance is lower, and bacteria go on the rampage, multiplying in great numbers.

There is one type of inflammation however, that is often confused with a cold but which is not due to an acute infection of the respiratory tract. More often than not it is caused by the tubercle bacillus, which most of us harbor in our bodies at one time or another. The condition is known as pleurisy and is charcterized by pain in the side. The pleura is a two-layer membrane forming a saclike affair which encloses the lungs. When these two layers become inflamed and rub together severe pain results.

Onslaught Gradual.

Sometimes disease of the pleura begins gradually. The individual may note a slowly increasing physical weakness, some loss of weight, and a capricious appetite. Now and then a dry cough unaccompanied by sputum is present. Sooner or later pain is felt in the chest. It may be first noticed in the early hours of the day; later the patient may be wakened out of a sound sleep because of its intensity. In some cases the pain is stabbing and lightninglike and is apparently confined to a small area in the chest wall. At this time the afternoon temperature is between 99 and 100 degrees F.

In other cases the symptoms of pleurisy come on without warning. The first intimation that something is wrong is a sharp, stabbing pain which almost paralyzes breathing. It may be located in the front of the chest, in the back beneath the shoulder blade, or low down in the back or in the abdomen. In this latter situation it is occasionally mistaken for the pain of appendicitis. If cough is present, it is generally hacking in character. When the symptoms come on suddenly the temperature is much higher than in the period of slow onset, and 102 to 103 degrees F. is not at all unusual. The pulse is increased correspondingly and the patient looks and feels ill. If the inflammation is severe enough to cause the pleura to secrete fluid, thus separating the inflammed surfaces, the pain will abate and the patient will become comfortable.

Rest Is Important.

Treatment must first be directed toward relieving pain. This may be accomplished rather quickly by applying strips of adhesive plaster to the affected side, thus preventing movement of the chest. If the two inflammed layers are not allowed to rub against each other pain will cease rather quickly. Rest in bed must be enforced strictly and the management of the case should be that of a possible tuberculosis, with plenty of food, fresh air, and good nursing.

If fluid collects in the pleural space so that the lung is compressed and unable to function, it may be necessary to remove it by tapping the chest. In this procedure physicians have learned that withdrawal of but a portion of the accumulated fluid is the wisest course. As recovery occurs the remainder is absorbed.

Upset of Crippled Notre Dame Scrambles Rose Bowl Picture

Gallico - -
Sings the Blues! Picks 4 Winners Out of 15 Games

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—Sing those Monday Mo-o-o-o-o-o-ing Blues . . . I say those Monday Morning Blues. What a headache! Four right out of 15 fairly simple selections. Now I know how some of those coaches must feel the morning after. And a couple of those I had right were just raw guesses such as Illinois to beat Michigan. My three-star special for the week-end, Army to beat Pitt, was a terrible bloomer, Pitt, 20; Army, 6. How does that make Army look against Notre Dame next week?

Pitt lost to Notre Dame. Doesn't figure at all. Army and Notre Dame will put on one whale of a battle Saturday. Their comparative records never mean a thing. Do you know, the only really positive hunch I had for last Saturday was that Northwestern would beat Notre Dame, and I didn't have the courage to pick it?

My Iowa didn't come through Minnesota, my Pennsylvanians folded up again, my Tulaners got themselves licked by Georgia, and my Mississippi Staters were knocked off by Louisiana State. Jim Crowley and Slip Madigan must be having nightmares over the wasted opportunities in Saturday's Fordham-St. Marys game. Each one might have had a win. I thought Fordham had a pretty fine looking football team, and in spite of his apparent mental lapse on the goal line when he let a St. Marys kick touch him and bound over the line where it was fallen upon for a touchdown, I think that big Maniaci is a great football player and certainly a very tough party when he has a football in his hands.

Effort to comment on the Fordham-St. Mary's thing, I find, leads only to further futility, and grandstand quarterbacking, which I detest. All the schools seem still to be playing in the accustomed groove, which is to wait until the third down before attempting a forward pass, or at the end of the game, when everybody knows what is coming, trying nothing but forward passes. At such times, the etnire backfield, with a couple of assistants fro mthe line, falls back to cover pass receivers.

THERE is no deception, and as a rule, no profitable result. By the way, I have never seen a passer so well protected as was the man from St. Mary's. Not more than once was a Fordham player able to rush him.

I had an interesting letter from a correspondent recently who was wearied because we still greet any revelations of professionalism in the colleges with red-hot headlines, and long, detailed stories. His point, and a wellt-aken one, was that it isn't news, since everybody knows that nine out of every ten colleges has its own type of so-called professionals, whether it is a scholarship, an alumni sponsorship or an out-and-out weekly payment, and not alone, as everybody knows, but nobody cares. Therefore, why the fuss and why the newspaper space.

The answer, however, is simple enough. It also implies a criticism of our national life. Merely knowing that something shady is going on does not destroy its news value. Reliable proof is still a good story because it at least proves somebody to be a liar. Everybody knows that college athletes receive some assistance to maintain them in college, and most of us feel that there is no harm in this, and, in many cases, a definite good, since it enables youngsters to receive, or be exposed to, a college education who might otherwise not have that chance.

BUT as long as the colleges cirtuously or otherwise maintain that this is not so, that they disapprove of this and would not stoop to it, just so long will it continue to be readable news when we can pin the lie to their shirt fronts To me, the unmasking of an arrant hypocrite is alfays one of the best of all news stories. I love to see a phony exposed.

We, on the newspaper staffs, are more or less like miners or prospectors, and our paydirt is truth. Whenever we can find a nugget of it gleaming in the dirt we like to shine it up and show it to our friends. It is what the papers spend millions of dollars a year to find. It is the one thing that hundreds of millions of people try to keep from us. Experts are paid salaries to lie to the newspapers. They get away with it, too, 364 days out of the year. On the 365th we have our fun, and our reward.

And so, it is one thing to know in our hearts that some sanctimonious college prexy is as blind as a bat to what is going on around him, or lieing in his teeth, and another to prove the lie. I do not feel there is anything morally or ethically wrong in helping a good ball carrier through college. But I do believe it is cheap and hypocritical to do it and say you're not.

And as long as this continues to be the case the occasional exposures, backed by reliable information, will continue to be news and nice juicy news. We are not saying—"O-o-o-oh, look! That university plays professional athletes—shame!" But simply—"The guys thta run Whatsis College are liars and hypocrites."

Clean Slates Boasted by 10 Teams

North Carolina Boosts Stock by Trouncing V.M.I., 56 to 0.

California, 14-0 Victor, Has Stanford as Only Big Obstacle.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—The big parade of the country's unbeaten college football forces, minus the fighting Irish of Notre Dame, moves otherwise in solid formation today toward the closing objectives of its spectacular course.

Only a week after soaring to such dramatic heights of conquest that an entire Nation acclaimed their achievement, Notre Dame's injury-riddled squad was knocked out of the championship race as well as the Rose Bowl picture by Northwestern in yesterday's most reverberating upset.

Warning signals had been hoisted for this particular affair. Hard hit by the loss of the sensational Andy Pilney, as well as other regulars, Notre Dame seemed likely to feel a reaction from its heart-tirring triumph of the week before over Ohio State. On top of this it was evident that Northwestern, despite three previous setbacks, was fast improving and ripe for an upset. Nevertheless, it was a terrific jolt to the universal following of the Irish to have the Wildcats come from behind far a 14-to-7 victory, their first in thi slong-standing rivalry since 1901.

Situation Scrambled.

Notre Dame's first defeat in seven starts not only scrambled the Rose Bowl situation but contrasted with the otherwise impressive advance of the country's major unbeaten and untied aggregations.

The latest display of power by the bridiron mighty finds Princeton, California, Minnesota and North Carolina more or less in that order, standing at the head of the class. Texas Christian and Southern Methodist in the Southwest, Marquette in the Middle West and the Eastern trio of Dartmouth, Syracuse and New York University round out the group of ten major collegiate squads with unblemished records.

California's decisive 14-0 victory over Washington's huskies removed any lingering doubt about the class of the Golden Bears, who have only one more big obstacle to remve—Stanfrd—in their drive to tht Pacific Coast Conference championship and the invitation to represent the West in the New Year's Day classic. Inasmuch as Stanford had to depend on the trusty toe of Monk Moscrip for the third straight wtek to squeeze out a last-minute 3-0 triumph over Southern California yesterday, there does not seem to be a great deal for California to worry about.

Tarheel Stock Soars.

North Carolina's Rose Bowl stock soared as a result of the crushing Tarhtel triumph over Virginia Military, 56 to 0. If this Southern steamroller flattens Duke next Saturday by a decisive margin it may land the invitation to Pasadena.

Big Ten rules would bar Minnesota from considering a Rose Bowl invitation. Princeton, even if invited afttr snubbing intersectional suggestions two years ago, would have to get Yale's consent in order to break a long-standing agreement against exera curricula competition.

Yesterday was a big day for the under dogs on the Midwest's slippery gridirons, but Minnesota's powerhouse once again withstood the pressure. The Gophers checked the rampant rushes of the great Ozzie Simmons, but had to come from behind to beat Iowa, 13 to 6. Meanwhilt, Illinois, after two straight conference beatings, rallied to knock Michigan out of the race with a 3-0 victory on Spurgeon's field goal. Wisconsin sprang an even bigger surprise by soundly whipping Purdue, 8 to 0, after absorbing five successive dtfeats.

Ohio State Rallies.

Ohio State, having found out the week before how it could be done, came from behind in the last half to score three touchdowns and overcame Chicago, 20 to 13, in one of the day's most thrilling games. The great Jay Berwanger, Chicago's candidate for All-America honors, pulled off an 85-yard touchdown gallop that gave the Maroon a commanding lead, but Ohio's counter-

Southwest—Texas Christian and Southern Methodist still unbeaten and untied.

Governor Seeks Hog to Pay a Bet

By the Associated Press.

Des Moines, Iowa, Nov. 10.—Gov. Clyde Herring today named John K. Valentine, State tax board chairman, head of a committee to find a razorback hog with which to pay the Governor's bet to Gov. Floyd Olson of Minnesota on the outcome of the Minnesota-Iowa football game.

"I think we will be able to find a hog which Olson can eat without serious complications within the next few days, and Valentine is the man to find it," the Governor said.

Charles Graml, Iowa adjutant general, and chief of the Governor's military staff, said he was completing arrangements for a truck the Governor promised to drive to St. Paul bearing the razorback hog.

4 Teams Keep Clean Slates In East

Dartmouth Leading Pack With Seven Victories; Three Win Six.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—Most of the East's unbeaten football teams which survived the firing of the first week of November came through the second with still unblemished records.

Four major colleges retained their undefeated and untied records while only one, Albright, was knocked off the list, losing a battle to Winchester Teachers. Dartmouth's high scoring array held the lead with a triumph over William and Mary to make it seven in a row. Princeton, New York University and Syracuse each hung up victory No. 6.

Holy Cross, tied by Manhattan earlier this year, recorded its seventh victory in eight games to stay close behind the leaders, while Northeatsern finished its season without a loss with five triumphs and three ties.

Keeps Scoring Lead.

Dartmouth, piling up 34 points despite stubborn resistance by the Southerners, maintained its scoring lead with a total of 248 points. The second-best figure was 208 points by Williams, which lost to Princeton, but remains unbeaten in its own class. Holy Cross showed the best defensive record, allowing only 13 points, all by Manhattan.

Field Seems Clear For North Carolina

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 10.—North Carolina's Tarheels carried all their eggs in one basket and if they can carry that basket through Duke's Blue Devils next Saturday with all the fruit intact they'll be able to claim everything but the kitchen sink when the prizes are passed out at the end of the season.

If they can get by Duke—and they'll be favored to do just that—Carl Snavely's men of destiny will have a valid claim to at least a share in the national championship, they'll have the Southern Conference championship in the bag, they'll merit Rose Bowl consideration and the championship of the State of North Carolina will be thrown in for good measure.

There'll be the matter of whipping Virginia's Cavaliers on Thanksgiving Day at Chapel Hill, of course, but the team that rolled over V. M. I., 56 to 0, yesterday will be a 1,000-to 1 favorite over the University of Virginia eleven which was whipped, 20 to 0, by Washington and Lee.

Stanley Keeps Scoring Lead In East

Amasses Total of 84 Points; Dick, of American U., Drops to Fifth.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—Eddie Stanley, fleet Williams halfback, retained his scoring lead in the eastern sector of the football world today with a total of 84 points in seven games.

Stanley made two touchdowns against Wesleyan yesterday while his rivals of a week ago, Bobby O'Malley, of Trinity, and Walter Dick, of American, failed to perform at their usual pace.

Vannie Albanese, big Syracuse fullback who made all his team's 14 points against Columbia, replaced O'Malley as runner-up with a 69 point total. O'Malley, with one touchdown, dropped to fourth place at 67 points, one behind Douglas Stone, of Salem (West Virginia).

Frank Patrick, of Pittsburgh, booted his fourth field goal of the season to regain the undisputed lead in that department while Joe Handrahan, of Dartmouth, made three points after touchdowns for a total of 19, leading Ken Sandbach, of Princeton, by two.

Emory-Henry and V. P. I., State Leaders, Face Crucial Games

By the Associated Press.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 10.—The two leaders in the State championship race looked back on Saturday's accomplishments with mingled feelings today and girded themselves for crucial battles which may remove a kink from the snarled title situation.

Emory and Henry's Wasps, victors in their only battle against Old Dominion competition, turned aside Oglethorpe, 28 to 0, while Virginia Tech, with only one tie to mar its Virginia record, took a 6-to-0 licking from favored N. C. State, but the Gobblers didn't need to feel ashamed of the fine exhibition they put up.

Tech will be rated a big edge next Saturday over Virginia's Cavaliers, who lost some of their prestige by taking a dismal 20-to-0 trouncing from Washington and Lee, while Emory and Henry will take on a crippled William and Mary eleven which battled gamely before going down, 34 to 0, before Dartmouth's onslaught.

Richmond Winner.

Richmond's Spiders played some good breaks in defeating Hampden-Sydney, 15 to 7, but they'll have to show their best next Saturday when they attempt to do to State what Virginia Tech tried gamely to do but couldn't quite accomplish.

An intercepted pass, thrown by Tech's Foots Dickerson and snagged by State's Charlie Gadd with an open road leading 30 yards to a touchdown, gave the invaders their victory margin at Portsmouth, but tht Wolfpack had to hang on desperately to protect their lead. Marvin Cregger brought the spectators to their feet when he took in a punt in the fourth quarter, sprinted over to tht sidelines and raced 85 yards for what looked like the tying touchdown. An official said he stepped outside, however, and the brilliant bid didn't count.

Meanwhile, Virginia Military's Cadets took the worst whipping of the Southern Confertnce season from North Carolina's undefeated Tar Heels, who romped all over Bill Raferty's ment, 56 to 0. The team that had decisively whipped William and Mary just couldn't make any htadway against the Chapel Hill defenders, while the Tar Heels, using practically every man on the squad, ran the invaders ragged.

Trims Virginia, 20-0.

Washington and Lee, its hopes of Southtrn Conference and State football championships long since gone, rose in its mighty wrath and smote down Virginia's Cavaliers, 20 to 0. After the opening minutes of the first quarter when the Cavaliers showed their best hand, Washington and Let played all of the trump cards.

Randolph-Macon's Yellow Jackets, with just one game between them and an undefeated season, gave American University's eleven a 34-to-7 whipping, with Paliscak scoring four touchdowns.

The Jackets will be idle next week, since little Gallaudet, hard hit by injuries, was forced to cancel all games on the remainder of its schedule. Other teams, however, looked forward to busy week-ends.

More Action Promised.

Because of the bearing on the State championship situation, Emory and Henry's meeting with Wil-William and Mary, at Williamsburg, and Virginia's game with V. P. I., at Charlottesville, held the spotlight, but other battles promised a maximum of action. V. M. I. will meet Davidson at Lexington, Washington and Lee has a tough battle with Maryland at College Park, N. C. State and Richmond clash at Richmond, Hampden-Sydney meets Swarthmore out in Death Valley, and Roanoke should give Guilford a walloping at Salem.

Roanoke, the hard-luck team of the State, with precious few victories despite considerable first-class football, romped all over King Friday night, 41 to 7.

The standings of Old Dominion elevens, both in games within and outside the State, follow:

Chicago Bears Top Redskins, 30 to 14

16,000 Watch Bostonians Drop 7th Straight.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Nov. 10.—The Boston Redskins displayed marked improvement today, although they dropped their seventh straight National Pro League game to the Chicago Bears, 30-14, before a 16,000 crowd at Fenway Park.

The presence of Doug Nott, who came from Detroit in the Bill Chepherd swap, provided the Redskins with a scoring punch and he ripped the Chicago line to shreds during the 40-yard march that ended with Jim Musick going over the Bears' goal line after a 2-yard buck for the first score of the game.

The Bears then cut loose. Bill Karr, the Bears' right end, took two scoring passes, tossed by Bernie Masterson and Gene Ronzani, into the Boston end zone; Masterson provided the third Chicago touchdown on an 8-yard off-tackle run, and, after Beattie Feathers smashed over for the fourth, George Corbett ended the visiting team's scoring by place-kiciking a 33-yard field goal.

Minnesota-Iowa Football Row Grows; Fans Asked to Decide

By the Associated Press.

IOWA CITY, Iowa, Nov. 10.—Fans at the Iowa-Minnesota football game yesterday held the decision as to whether athletic relations between the two universities were to continue.

Coach Bernie Bierman, of Minnesota, put the issue up to the 50,000 spectators and University of Iowa officials, declaring:

"I'm fed up with this 'roughing Simmons' theme that sports writers and fans of Iowa have been harping on since the beginning of the season." He referred to Oze Simmons, Iowa's Negro backfield ace.

"Minnesota simply will forget about Iowa if Iowans don't behave themselves at the game this afternoon," Bierman said.

Bierman's ire apparently was stirred by Gov. Clyde L. Herring's statement yesterday that "if the officials stand for any rough tactics like Minnesota used last year, I'm sure the crowd won't."

Shortly before game time, Gov. Herring declared his statement of yesterday was only friendly banter and that he had assured Bierman that "a Minnesota team, or any other team, has nothing to fear from an Iowa crowd."

"Minnesota," Bierman explained, "does not feel that it roughed Simmons in last year's home-coming game."

At Minneapolis, President Lotus D. Coffman of the University of Minnesota said the impression that Minnesota football players were guilty of roughing against Iowa last year was "manufactured by outside forces."

By telegraph, Gov. Floyd B. Olson, of Minnesota, offered to bet Gov. Clyde Herring, of Iowa, a prize hog on the outcome of the game. At the same time, he assured Bierman by telegraph that he need have no fear of Iowa crowds.

Later Gov. Herring told an Associated Press reporter to inform Gov. Olson he accepted the bet.

Irish Defeat Is Held Akin To Ohio's

Layden's Wisecrack as Buckeyes Bow Is Now Recalled.

New Yorkers Share in Football's Biggest 'Hangover.'

By Jimmy Powers.
A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—Humbled by Northwestern, stooge of the Big Ten, scant victor over Pitt and miracle winner over Ohio State—Notre Dame today stands in the ruins of its natoinal championship hopes with the biggest hangever in football history.

No Rose Bowl, no end-to-end and back-to-back wholesale All-American honors. There is plenty of Wurra Wurra in this village, me lads—more so, perhaps, than at South Bend, for Notre Dame was the volunteer Alm Mammy of rugged grocery clerks, truck drivers, subway guards, all sturdy and sincere men of the ranks who were deprived of a rah-rah career.

Every tavern, bar and corner smoke shop in New York echoed with Notre Dame arguments over the week-end. If Pilney had been able to play——. If the timekeeper had waited a few seconds longer——. If the boys had not been so cocky and careless——. If the backfield had been drier——. If that touchdown had not been called back——.

Layden Termed Victim.

Coach Elmer Layden, who used his second stringers too long and then frantically inserted his varsity only to see the Wildcats score the winning goal against them, was the victim of his own wisecracks.

After the Ohoi State game, a famed football expert, a friend of Layden's, said: "Elmer, you were lucky to beat Pitt. You were luckier still to beat Ohio State. The Ohio boys were overconfident and careless. They'll beat you 99 out of the next 100 times out. They kept their stars on the bench too long. They counted their touchdowns before they were hatched. They tossed that one into your lap."

This was certainly not to be denied and Ohio State, with its quick-charging line, ts expert squadrons of blockers and tacklers, its Tippy Dye, its Jumping Joe Williams and all its talent was immediately tossed into the gridiron rubbish can.

Ohio Alibis Duplicated.

Today Notre Dame finds itself in the same can. The same alibis, the same fading claims to national championship, the same mistakes apply equally to Ohio State and Notre Dame. Meanwhile, the West still has two outstanding undefeated clubs—Marquette and Minnesota. Their records compare with the best, for Pitt has been tied by Fordham, Navy has been beaten, so has Yale, Purdue, Iowa and other clubs used in the comparative scores of Marquette, Minnesota and the teams who challenge their right to claim the title. There are other teams in the South, Southwest, Pacific Coast and way stations, and until they are beaten——.

Two Advance To Anacostia Semifinals

Campbell, Smith Leading Players in Turkey Tournament.

B. R. CAMPBELL and P. Smith yesterday advanced to the Anacostia turkey tournament. Campbell crushed Bill Davis, 6 and 5, while Smith had to travel to the nineteenth hole to eliminate another Smith, T. E. by initials.

With contestants in the four flights given several days in which to complete their first round matches, Earl Bean is expected to meet C. Loving today or tomorrow and Ray Fleming to oppose W. W. Seay.

In the fourth flight, B. Tawney defeated E. Hantzman, 2 and 1, and S. McCoy won from Jack Ray, 1 up.

Ellen Kincaid the little "girl wonder" from Beaver Dam Country Club, lost to Mrs. Ora Emge, 2 up, in the quarterfinals of the Marmion Cup tournament at Beaver Dam. Miss Kincaid, twice repulsed Mrs. Emge in the final of the women's club championship, and thus did Mrs. Emge, herself a former club champion, gain revenge.

Mrs. Emge shot a 91, and held Miss Kincaid 2 up at the turn.

Mrs. C. E. Purdy defeated Mrs. Earl Sechrest, 1 up; Mrs. R. C. Miller defeated Mrs. William Hackman, 2 and 1, and Mrs. N. J. Waldron won by default. Next Sunday Mrs. Purdy and Mrs. Mitchell will meet, while Mrs. Emge will oppose Mrs. Waldron.

One of the lowest scores to be turned in by a woman club member at Washington Golf and Country Club in the last few years was made yesterday by Mrs. Douglas Tschiffely, who shot an 88—first time she ever has broken 90 at the course.

Mrs. Tschiffely, who recently returned from a two-month tour of America, had a 44 on each nine, playing with Mr. and Mrs. Otto Thacker and their son, John, runner-up for the club championship. John did himself proud with a 37-36—73, providing a real treat for his cheer leaders, Sister Kitty and Brother Bill, who followed the foursome.

Mrs. Tschiffely's card:

Out ..... 4 4 5 4 5 6 6 6 4—44
In ..... 6 3 7 5 4 5 5 4 5—44—88

The new first tee at Kenwood Golf and Country Club is open, and is a welcome relief to those chronic out-of-bound slicers who parked their first shots into the woods. The hole now plays to the left of the fairway. It is 380 yards.

Professional Wiffy Cox also announces that work on the new fifth green has been tsarted, the moulding of which will be completed by Friday. The new green is 50 yards from the present one, thus making the hole a legitimate par 5—461 yards.

Miller D. Stevinson, Columbia's "happy warrior" of the links, and Donald Woodward, may look for new fields to conquer following their victory over Albert Mackenzie and Luther Steward, jr., in the two-ball club championship. Their manager is D'Arcy (Reds) Bannagan, Fred McLeod's big assistant.

"No team seems to be able to beat 'em," Bannagan said. "If they are unbeaten at the end of five years—we're gonna go after some other club teams to play them."

Reese Hair, the former club champion, doesn't believe in giving up the ship. Yesterday on the seventeenth hole at Washington Golf and Country Club, Hair rolled up

Central, Eastern to Clash in Feature of Week's 10-Game Menu

Title Hopes At Stake on Friday

Tech, Western to Renew Feud Tomorrow on Central Field.

By John R. Vosburgh.

BBRILLIANT array of ten games bedecks the high and prep school schedules this week. Central and Eastern, of course, in their struggle for the interhigh championship at Central Stadium on Friday top the bill, but most of the other nine affrays are also brimming over with class.

What promises to set a new mark for the spectacular is due when Gonzaga High's fast-traveling sleight-of-hand artists tangle with George Washington High, of Alexandria, which has shown itself to be one of the strongest high or prep school teams in this esction of the country. The game is scheduled for Friday at Alexandria, but possibly will be moved up to an earlier date.

In the week's first game tomorrow, Tech and Western renew a rivalry which seems to have been sharpening with the years. Although Western is definitely out of the interhigh running, Tech needs the victory to stay in the race. A victory for Eastern over Central would then make a three-way tie for the title.

Tech Slight Choice.

Tech, however, reigns only a slight favorite over the Georgetowners and, with the prospect of a keen aerial battle more or less certain, Central Stadium should be lined with some 3,000 or 4,000 fans at the kick-off. It was the Tech-Western game last year which resulted in the cancellation of the remaining interhigh games. Tech won, 26 to 0.

One of the big prep school games of the year involving two Washington teams comes off on Friday when St. Alban's powerful eleven takes on Landon Prep, which apparently is just beginning to hit its stride. Although St. Alban's rates the favorite, Landon reduced the odds substantially last week when it beat Boys Latin High, of Baltimore, 6 to 0. St. Alban's, despite its overwhelming triumph over Georgetown Prep and Church Farm School, of Philtdelphia, was held to a 6-to-0 victory by Boys Latin.

Game at Garret Park.

St. John's and Georgetown Prep, both without a victory this season, meet at Garret Park on Friday in a battle ofthe beaten. The Johnnies rule the choice to win on the face oftheirstubborn battle with Gonzaga.

Pimlico Race Track, Nov. 9.

Dear Al:

Tomorrow, Armistice Day, will be celebrated here with the best Monday program I can remember at a Maryland track. Usually "wash day" is given over to maiden and cheap claiming races. The Walden Handicap tops the program and the $7,500 added test at a mile and a sixteenth has drawn the cream of the juveniles in this section. A sprint bringing Nautch, Accolade, Cycle and other stars to the post is the secondary feature. The Walden was first run in 1907 and the record for the event is 1:44 3-5 set by Chicstraw in 1933. Guy Bedwell refused to make $1,000 profit for giving a horse two meals. He claimed Dartle for $4,000 and refused a $5,000 offer the next morning. Bedwell is going to take Dartle and some 20 horses to California. Clocker Mike Says that the horse Thursday should be renamed Wednesday since the judges moved him up yesterday.

BILL.

First race—Ugin has some fair performances to his credit while running in more formidable company. Seems destined to graduate here. Iron Ore did not run up to my expectations last out, but he has worked well and deserves another chance. Clever Girl is due to repeat in this company.

Second race—Spinach bounded away from his opposition at Laurel. The old campaigner likes Pimlico and only a mishap can keep him from scoring here. Matar has improved of late, and I expect him to hold Escapade safe. Clocker Mike is around with a tip on Rock Lad.

Third race—This is an open race. I learn toward Berceuse, making her first start since Laurel, where she finished a bang-up second. Coucci is likely to ride, and I expect no mistakes. Ina Dear is far too fit to disregard. She will be close at the end. Lady Carrot is a possible surprise.

Fourth race—Hope to Do prefers an off track and may get it tomorrow. The Grayson star at tops now and may be on top all the way. Bubblesome won last in cheaper company, but is a stout factor here. Demonstration is Clocker Mike's special.

Fifth race—Wise Punce has been rounding into form and I probably will draw a bronx cheer for putting him ahead of Nautah, Accolade, Cycle and Dartle. However, Wise Prince gets in with 100 pounds. Mud would enhance his chances.

Sixth race—I'm going to try to make Ned Reigh win the Walden. I watched him closely in the Futurity. He bolted to the outside at the break and lacked racing room while trying to make a move on the back stretch. At the finish he was full of run while working his way between horses. Clear sailing would put this fellow on top. Memory Book won at Laurel in fine fashion and is the one to beat. Snark, He Did, Jean Bart and Lemont are fit and ready. Clocker Mike will play Pullman. A sleeper, he says.

Seventh race—Orinoco is a cheap sort, but his sprint here last week convinced me that he is going to win at a route. Maddest and Diablerie for the rest. Behemoth is going to shock the customers very soon.

Eighth race—Miss Monoa has been juggled around awaiting a spot. This may be the day. Sir Ten and R. Pinchot figure close. Mud would help Mad Frump and Taunton.

Big Grid Games In New York Next Year

Eight Intersectional Tilts Already Set, Including Lions and Columbia.

By the United Press.

NEW YORK, Nov. 10.—One of the most attractive intersectional football schedules ever arranged for one city will be played in New York next fall.

Fordham, Columbia, New York U. and Army already have booked eight intersectional games with leaders from other sections of the country. Manhattan College, which is gradually developing into a football power under Chick Meehan, is dickering for several intersectional games, which will probably increase the invading teams to 10 or more.

Three Southern teams, two from the Midwest, two from the Far West and one from the Southwest have been scheduled for New York appearances. Fordham has four intersectional battles, meeting Southern Methodist, Georgia, Purdue and St. Mary's Columbia has two, playing V. M. I. and Stanford. New York University has scheduled the U. of North Carolina and may book another intersectional foe. As usual, the Notre Dame-Army game will be played at Yankee Stadium.

Stanford to Return.

One of the high spots of the 1936 season will be the return of Stanford to New York to meet Columbia. Stanford made its first trans-continental journey in 1928, when the Indians, then coached by Pop Warner, came to New York and conquered Army, 26 to 0. It will be the second game in history between Columbia and Stanford. The Morningside Lions defeated the Indians in the Rose Bowl game January 1, 1934, by a score of 7 to 0.

Another colorful team which makes its second New York appearance next fall is Southern Methodist. The Mustangs from Dallas, Tex., again will play Fordham, S. M. U., then under Ray Morrison, made their first metropolitan visit in 1933, when the Dallas eleven handed Fordham one of its worst defeats under Jimmy Crowley, 26 to 14.

In addition to the intersectional schedule, several other attractive games involving Eastern teams have been booked for New York. Outstanding in this group is the Army-Columbia game. The last time the Lions played the Cadets was in 1924, when they defeated West Point, 21 to 7.

The big games already scheduled for New York City in 1936 follow:

October 10. Southern Methodist-Fordham at the Polo Grounds. Army-Columbia at Yankee Stadium.
October 17—V. M. I.-Columbia at Baker bowl. University of North Carolina-New York University at Yankee Stadium.
October 24—St. Mary's-Fordham at the Polo Grounds.
October 31—Pittsburgh-Fordham at the Polo Grounds.
November 7—Purdue-Fordham at the Polo Grounds.
November 14—Army-Notre Dame at Yankee Stadium.
November 21—Georgia-Fordham at the Polo Grounds.
November 28—Stanford-Columbia at Yankee Stadium.

attack, led by Jumping Joe Williams, proved as unstoppable as Notre Dame's rush at Columbus the week before.

Marquette, by taking Michigan State into camfp on the latter's home grounds, 13 to 7, remained as Minnesoto's outstanding challenger for Middle Western honors. Marquette comes East to tackle Temple this week, while Minnesota moves against its traditional rival, Michigan, at Ann Arbor.

Princeton removed any doubt about its stature as the East's greatest gridiron power by trouncing Harvard, 35 to 0. The Tigers toyed wit hthe plucky but outclassed Crimson squad. Dartmouts, which now looms as the only real threat to an unbeaten Princeton campaign, gathered mometnaum to whip William and Mary, 35 to 0. Syracuse, led by the brilliant Vannie Albanese, turned back Columbia, 14 to 2, while New York University easily kept its slate clean with a 45-0 decision over C. C. N. Y.

Navy Wins, Army Loses.

Army and Navy, whose uniformed pageantry helps make them the East's outstanding drawing cards, met contrastin gfate. The Cadets had the misfortune to catch Pittsburgh on the rebound and absorbed a 29-6 shellacking before 68,000 in the lair of the Panthers. Navy rallied after three straight defetaes to best Pennsylvania, 13 to 0, before 75,000 spectators at Franklin Field.

St. Mary's, beaten only by California this season, was held to a 7-to-7 tie by Fordham in the day's most colorful intersectional affair. It was the second straight "moral victory" for Fordham, which held Pittsburgh to a scoreless deadlock the week before and was strictly the under-dog against the burly squad from California.

Holy Cross, tied once so far, remained undefeated in the chase for Eastern honors by conquering Carnegie, 7 to 0, while Yale put on a second-half spurt to hand Brown its sixth straight set-back, 20 to 0.

Nebraska 19-to-13 Victor.

Decisive championship blows were struck elsewhere. Nebraska's corn huskers rallied to turn back Kansas, 19 to 13, and clinch the big six title after a year's lapse. Louisiana State moved into undisputed possession of the Southeastern conference leadership by handing an unexpected trouncing to Mississippi State, conquerer of Alabama and Army. L. S. U. emerged with a 28-to-13 verdict and its sixth victory in a row since being beaten by Rice, while Tennessee was knocking out Mississippi, 14 to 13, with a thrilling finish.

Utah's high hopes of returning to the Rocky Mountain heights were shattered by Colorado's 14-to-0 victory, leaving the latter in sole possession of the Conference leadership.

Georgia's brilliant passing attack accounted for a surprisingly decisive victory over Tulane, 26 to 13, while Auburn rolled up an equally unexpected margin of victory, 33 to 7, over Georgia Tech. Alabama steam rollered Clemson, 33 to 0, to demonstrate the Crimson Tide stitllt titst tat tptotwtoe o be recktucky outscored Florida, 15 to 6.

Texas Christian, having beaten Loyola at New Orleans Friday night, and Southern Methodist, which plays U. C. L. A. in Los Angeles tomorrow, yielded the Southwest spotlight to other teams in this ruged sector. Texas took advantage of the occasion to wallop Baylor, 25 to 6, and thus emerge from the Conference cellar. Rice bowled over Arkansas, 20 to 7. Oklahoma made it an

TODAY, as last year, and as it will for thousands of years to come, a small shaft of light from the sun swings across the center of the Rock of Remembrance in the Victorian National War Memorial at Melbourne, Australia, on Armistice Day. The light enters the memorial through a small hole in the roof of the building—a hole placed so accurately that promptly at 11 o'clock on November 11 each year the shaft of light reaches the center of a rock slab below. In the next 5,000 years, if the building stands that long, the shaft of light will never vary more than two minutes from 11 o'clock as it reaches the center of the rock to illuminate these words:

"Greater Love Hath No Man."

The beam of sunlight is oval, measuring 8½ inches by 9 inches, but because it strikes the level rock at a slight angle, it will illuminate a circular area.

Intricate calculations went into the planning of the unusual shrine. It has been determined that the shaft of light that now strikes the center of the rock at 11 o'clock sharp will lag little by little during the next 2,300 years until, in the year 4235, it will be about two minutes behind time. Then a gradual correction will begin, and in another 2,000 years the light will be back on schedule.

Federal laws make it impossible to conduct a lottery in this country comparable to those of other countries—yet there is no Federal law against it. Federal laws do, however, prohibit the sending of lottery tickets or information concerning lotteries through the mails. By a strict application of this law, newspapers carrying news of a lottery can be barred from the mails.

Broadway

By Ed Sullivan

"PETER IBBETSON:" Gary Cooper does a fine characterization, definitely proving that he has become an actor. This flicker was one of the tough assignments over at Paramount. It took much work to lick it, as they say in Hollywood. There were numerous scenarios, many writers and frequent retakes on the picture after it actually got started. The studio was determined to make a class flicker out of this classic.

Gary and Bing Crosby are the only male stars at Paramount who can demand and get their favorite photographer. Cooper's choice is Charles Laing. The big job in "Peter Ibbetson" was to photograph the change of the players from the real to the unreal and back to the real. The flicker depends on this, and it is done effectively. The man who should get the credit is Gordon Jennings, of the "special effects" department. Jennings didn't use trick shots, but the effects were achieved by photographing shafts of light and slow, out-of-focus dissolves.

• • • •

Director Henry Hathaway also assisted in the writing of the scenario. Hathaway directed "Bengal Lancer" and is being regarded as one of the best directors in the cinema town.

Hathaway doesn't direct by stepping up and acting out the role for the performer. He sits on the set and quietly discusses the scene he's going to film with the performers. Director Hathaway does stand by the camera and make all the facial gestures while the performers are acting. When a flicker is completed he is more fatigued than any performer in it.

• • • •

"THE Melody Lingers On": This flicker was manufactured strictly because of the movie audience's current fondness for opera in pictures. Josephine Hutchinson, who is making a monicker in pictures, played in flickers before. She played in "The Little Princess" with Mary Pickford when she was a little girl. Then Miss Hutchinson took to the stage, and it wasn't until she came to the Coast in an Eva La Gallienne production that she received a movie offer. She is now acquiring movie mannerisms on the set.

Helen Westley, a trouper, is an actress who maintains the customs of the stage on the movie set. When close-ups are being filmed, players seldom wear their complete costumes, for only the face is being pictured. But, when Director David Burton told Miss Westley that she didn't have to put on a certain gown for a close-up, she looked at him with scorn, went to the dressing room, donned the gown and then allowed him to make the close-up.

• • • •

"She Couldn't Take It." George Raft generally studies his script on the set and he is at ease when he likes the director. He liked Tay Garnett, who directed this flicker. Garnett always directs holding a cane in a clenched fist. He insists that he must be doing something while the performers are acting.

The flicker was purposely titled "She Couldn't Take It" for its marquee value.

• • • •

"THREE Kids and a Queen": The screen play for this flicker was written by Barry Trivers and Sam Ornitz, which shows how odd collaborations are made in Hollywood. Trivers is a former song writer and is now engaged to Florine McKinney, and Ornitz is the author of "Haunch, Paunch and Jowl," once printed anonymously. This flicker is unique because it is one that was recalled to the Universal Studio after it had been released. Its further bookings were halted until it was changed.

"Mutiny On the Bounty": Metro boasts of the fact and advertises boldly that this flicker was two years in the making and cost $2,000,000 to produce. It was not long ago when such data about a flicker, published in columns, was said by producers and exhibitors to be no business of the general movie public, and that such statements cast aspersions on the cinema art.

• • • •

Many of the sea sequences were made at Catalina Island and while Franchot Tone was detailed to this beach, W. S. Van Dyke, who was directing a Joan Crawford flicker, also took his troupe to a portion of this island to make some location scenes.

Charles Laughton portrays a great sea captain, but those who know about the sea are amused by the fact that this captain sails his boat straight into a storm with all the sails rigged up. It makes a good pictorial effect. Edith Wilkerson tells of someone who said to Irving Thalberg after the preview of "Mutiny on the Bounty:" "It's a hit. Looks like a million." Thalberg answered: "It should. It cost two."

Auto Industry Expects To Double Production

New York, Nov. 10 (AP).—The automotive industry expects to assemble 750,000 units in the final quarter of 1935, according to estimates submitted to the Commerce Department.

This figure would approximately double the output for the corresponding period of 1934.
